SIR RODERICK STEWART has come a long way since growing up above the family newsagent's at 507 Archway Road in north London. It was while he was recording his new album, thousands of miles away in Los Angeles, that he decided he needed to do something different. Which is where south Londoner Jools Holland came in. "What Rod was saying is that he wanted it to sound a bit rough around the edges," says the pianist. "Well, you've come to the right bloke..." The result is Swing Fever, the pair's new big band-influenced album.

If Rod Stewart has learnt one thing in his 60-year career it's how to confound the critics and have hit after hit. Whether it was kicking footballs into the crowd with the Faces or providing the theme to Sailor, the 1976 documentary about HMS Ark Royal, Rod has a knack of capturing the public imagination as well as a reputation for having a good time whilst doing it. Turn to page 12 and read what happened when we got Rod and Jools in a room to talk about everything from politics to pubs to the new Amy Winehouse.

Elsewhere, look out for a piece by Dame Esther Rantzen. She recalls the time that her tears in response to the story of a man who had saved hundreds of children from the Holocaust halted a recording of That's Life, and talks about her cancer diagnosis and campaign to change the law on assisted dying. It's an emotional read...

News of the sudden death of Steve Wright came as a shock to everyone and on page 8 we celebrate a giant of broadcasting who was a constant presence in the lives of millions of people in Britain for over 40 years.

Three very different people who have, because of their talent and drive, affected us all in many different ways.

TEN QUESTIONS WITH

JESSICA CHASTAIN

The Oscar-winning actor seeks out small-budget films – even if it means doing her own hair

One of Hollywood's elite, Jessica Chastain, 46, has starred in sci-fi blockbusters like Interstellar and The Martian, as well as the critically acclaimed films The Help and Zero Dark Thirty. In 2022 she won an Oscar for The Eyes of Tammy Faye and is now playing a recovering alcoholic and assault victim in Memory, opposite Peter Saarsgard.

You've won an Oscar and been in loads of massive movies - is there a downside to success?

I think that you reach a level of success where the very interesting film-makers stop calling. Because they are like, "I'm going to wait for ever for an answer. They're going to string me along, they'll sign up, and then they'll ditch it at the last minute for something else that makes them more money." So the weird thing is that now it's more me seeking them out. I think people are nervous to approach me because they think they don't have enough money [to afford me].

There must be advantages, too - presumably, you can say "no" to more?

That's true. I find clichés a bit boring – for female characters or for stories.

In Memory you play a survivor of sexual assault - how did you approach that?

The sad thing is, when you look at statistics, most of us know women who are survivors of sexual attack or rape or assault. I work with a lot of charities, so I was very familiar with some horrific stories. And what I needed to do was make it as real as possible for my character, Sylvia.

As part of that process, is it true that you went shopping for Sylvia's clothes yourself?

Yes! I was like, "I want to go to a store where she would get all of her clothes." So I bought a bunch of things that I thought would make sense for Sylvia. Memory was a very small film with no dressing rooms and I was doing my own hair every day, and buying the clothes, costumes... it was so creative and so exciting.

The film is about the subjective nature of memory - how does movies being fetishised. It's so disturbing for society. But The Good Nurse focused on the beauty, of love stopping the darkness. And again, Memory is another film where love and lightness help ease Sylvia through the darkness of her trauma. I'm someone who believes in the good in people. We all go through difficult things > in our lives. People behave the way they're treated. And so if you approach someone with compassion and kindness and love, I believe it changes them.

Is that why you campaign on equal pay, women's and LGBTQ+ rights?

Eddie Redmayne n *The Good Nurs*e

I very actively support anyone who I feel is being mistreated. I think it was something that was instilled in me in childhood. I had no one tell me to be this way. It's just kind of who I became.

Were you inspired by any female role models?

The sad thing is that [when I was] in school I didn't really get to have any female role models. No one talked about woman's heroism. History is only told from one point of view, that of the victor. And that's not really what history is it's almost abusive to children.

What's your biggest vice?

I don't do drugs and I'm vegan. I was feeling very sick and my friend said, "Why don't you eat vegan for two weeks?" The first week I was very hungry, and the second week I felt amazing. When I finished the two weeks, I went to a restaurant and ordered fish and risotto and I felt sick again. So, I decided to just eat vegan. Now, I have so much energy and I do four movies a year. I also don't drink coffee usually - but when I go to Italy [her husband is Italian, I might have an espresso. JAMES MOTTRAM

to be a to be a medical adviser

Thom Petty has worked in the NHS since 2005 as an anaesthetist and has experience in intensive care. He was the lead medical adviser on ITV1 drama Breathtaking.

TRUST ME, I'M A DOCTOR

I was approached by the writers of Breathtaking, Rachel Clarke, Jed Mercurio and Prasanna Puwanarajah, to provide testimonial about working in a London hospital during the pandemic. The culture of the NHS is very specific and sometimes medical drama veers into something more dramatic, but they wanted it to be authentic.

DOCTOR'S ORDERS

We did a two-day boot camp with the cast to talk about their roles. and what the persona of a EXPERT ADVICE consultant, Thom Petty knows registrar, junior doctor and medical student would be, as well as things like how you examine a patient and how to put a stethoscope in your ears.

FOLLOWING THE RULES

In the show, we were very strict about PPE [personal protective equipment] - it's called donning [putting on] and doffing [removing] PPE. During the pandemic, there were different rules for that in the emergency department, the wards and in intensive care. If we didn't get that right, we would absolutely lose our medical audience.

INVOLVED AT EVERY LEVEL

I worked with make-up on how someone with low oxygen would be slightly grey-blue, particularly around the lips. I was also involved with post-production to make sure that resuscitation sounded like the real thing. We recorded a lot of sound on set - chasing trollevs around with mics, taking off PPE, bin lids closing, a live defibrillator. Everything you see in the drama is a real piece of medical equipment.

TRUST YOUR AUDIENCE

We had the cast talking about PO2

[partial pressure of oxygen], SATs [oxygen saturation] and BP [blood pressure], because that's what people say in a hospital. We can never patronise an audience in a procedural or technical show.

LAURA RUTKOWSKI

Breathtaking is streaming on ITVX

Interesting question. I mean, you're touching on something that actually drew me to the script when I read it. I was worried that people would discount Sylvia, because of her misperception of the things that happened. What I found to be so moving is we understand that the memory of what she experienced walks into the room before she does. And so she's having to look through it, in some sense, to try to figure out her way forward.

your own memory work?

Is there an emotional cost to playing that sort of character?

Oh, gosh, vou never really know the emotional cost. I think whenever I play someone, I'm creating a woman that I spend a lot of time with. I plant these little seeds inside me - certain moments I can relate to - and I build from there and let her grow. So there's a sadness, I think, when you say goodbye, but also there's a freedom.

Was that the case when you finished filming The Good Nurse with Eddie Redmayne, about real-life killer Charles Cullen?

I love that The Good Nurse was more focused on the heroism and the light rather than the dark. We're so used to serial killers in

STEVE WRIGHT A LIFE IN RT

'TA-RA, THEN...'

Paul Gambaccini pays tribute to the man who revolutionised the sound of British radio

Veteran broadcaster Paul Gambaccini was among the first to spot the talent of Steve Wright, who would become his friend and colleague. More than 40 years ago, Gambaccini used his column in Radio Times to tell readers, "Steve Wright is likely to be one of [BBC Radio's] big names in the 80s, so you should get to know him before seven million others do."

"I was instantly captivated by Steve, because of what tens of millions would go on to hear in the coming years," says Gambaccini. "With very little resources, he was creating an entire world – a world of optimism, humour and sunlight. He illuminated the lives of generations."

It was as if Wright created a club, says Gambaccini, and all you had to do to join was listen. "And if you were in this club, you had a one-to-one relationship with Steve Wright."

"Wrighty" did what all the greats did, according to his fellow broadcaster: "Go with what

'Steve created a world of optimism, humour and sunlight'

you've got". He didn't try to be a music expert but he had an intuitive knowledge of radio, the medium he would dominate with unassuming mastery for more than four decades.

According to Gambaccini, after he was hired by Radio 1, Wright would often fly to the United States for the weekend, book a hotel or drive around, simply to sample different radio shows and pick up ideas. The DJ was excited by the "zoo format", in which the presenter is joined in the studio by sidekicks and co-hosts. Wright was the first to introduce it to British schedules, even creating fictional on-air partners and comedy characters, including Gervais the hairdresser and Mr Angry.

Many of our best-loved broadcasters owe a debt to Wright for the radio revolution he launched, as they have been quick to acknowledge. "Greg James of Radio 1 said that without Steve Wright there would be no Greg James Show, nor many of the breakfast shows that came before it," Gambaccini says.

Wright's effortless style belied meticulous presentation. He was very good technically, according to Gambaccini. "There are people like Steve and Noel Edmonds who were very good at making it all look spontaneous. Both of them were geniuses of timing, of putting a show together for maximum impact."

A former controller of Radio 2, Jim Moir, who brought Wright to the station, used to say of another presenter, "He thinks about his show the moment his arse hits the seat." By contrast, Wright would come in hours before his programme every day to prepare it. "He was putting in a nine-to-five day for a three-hour show," says Gambaccini.

"Like Kenny Everett, whom Steve greatly admired, he treated the studio like an instrument. Most of us just tolerated it, but Steve would come in with piles of tape cartridges – the cutting-edge audio technology of the day – and they were full of voices, jingles, musical passages... Watching him in the studio was like looking at an octopus, he was arms, arms, arms!"

The two DJs had dinner together from time to time. "He would invite me to the RAC Club in London," recalls Gambaccini. "In fact, the last time I spoke to him, a few days before his death, he was on the steps of the club and I warned him not to get soaked in the rain."

FTER IT EMERGED that his Radio 2 weekday afternoon Big Show was coming to an end, Wright confided in his friend. He left the show in 2022 but continued to present his Sunday Love Songs programme. "Steve was disappointed when, to his personal surprise, he was cut off in his ratings prime," says Gambaccini. "He was incredulous from the perspective that he was still doing the job. But what he hadn't anticipated was that the station wanted different listeners." The two presenters discussed reports that the BBC is planning new digital stations, including a spin-off channel for Radio 2 listeners who want to hear the hits of the 50s, 60s and 70s. "We were the only two people mentioned in the press release so we thought, let's check in with each other. Now Steve will never find out what was intended."

Gambaccini says the best tribute to his old friend is that he made the lives of many other people better. "Think about that – millions of people every year, for 44 years. He had one of the biggest radio audiences in history. This wasn't the death of a star – it was the death of a giant." STEPHEN SMITH

LEST WE FORGET

Why don't we talk about the death of three million people in India in 1943, asks Kavita Puri

IN THE MIDDLE of the Second World War in the dying days of Empire at least three million Indians, who were British subjects, died because of starvation or disease linked to malnutrition. It's one of the largest losses of civilian lives on the Allied side, yet it's not well known in Britain. There is no memorial, museum or even a plaque anywhere in the world to the victims of the Bengal Famine of 1943. How can three million people disappear from public memory?

For the past year I've been gathering firsthand accounts and scouring archives around the world for testimonies to piece together what happened. More than 80 years after the humanitarian catastrophe, few survivors are left, and there's a huge urgency in collecting these stories before it's too late. When I've met eye-witnesses, it's clear, even after all these years, they've never forgotten the devastating scenes of emaciated people, of death on the streets of Calcutta, the vultures picking at people who were barely alive.

'Churchill is at the heart of the controversy'

Much debate has focused on the many complex causes. Life was already hard for millions of rural Bengalis. After the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, they swept through South East Asia and were perilously close to the Indian border. Once Burma fell, its cheap rice ceased to be

This strained the already fragile local economy. Rice was hoarded, often for profit, and a cyclone hit one of the main rice-producing districts in Bengal, with crop disease destroying much of the rest. And on top of that hundreds of thousands of British and American soldiers were in Calcutta to fight on the Asian front. They, along with all the workers who arrived to work in the wartime industries, needed feeding. So rice supplies were put under huge pressure.

But it's the role of wartime PM Winston Churchill that's at the heart of the controversy, and whether he could have done more to alleviate the crisis. There are > questions over whether his views on Indians - documented particularly by his Secretary of State for India Leo Amery in his personal diary from the time - affected his response to the famine. Discussion centres on whether he and the war cabinet could have released more shipping, in the middle of the war, when they were fighting on many fronts, to send food aid. It's an incendiary debate. Type the words "Bengal famine" into social media and you'll see what I mean.

But while people argue over the causes, and Churchill's response - which are important and necessary to explore - it has obscured discussion of the three million that died. Three million. Just think about that number. It's this story of the human experience that I wanted to recover. I heard extraordinary accounts of surviving the worst, horror at what was unfolding in Bengal, and individual acts of generosity as well as courage. It's a difficult listen, and an aspect of our wartime story that should be better known.

▼OR OVER A decade I've been collecting the oral histories of British South Asians in the postwar years in Radio 4's Three Pounds in My Pocket, as well as the witnesses in Britain to the devastating aftermath of the partition of British India in Partition Voices. This, by far, has been the hardest series to make: not only is the subject so fraught but, after 80 years, the wartime generation is diminishing, and those personal testimonies will soon no longer be able to be recorded. But these stories from the Bengal famine, whether we like it or not, are part of British history, and our war story too. We should be able to discuss it in a civilised way, so the memory of the three million doesn't disappear.

Sir Rod Stewart and Jools Holland on the power of performing, the perils of TV talent shows - and why the slow death of Britain's pubs is a disaster for music

INTERVIEW BY CRAIG MCCLEAN

N THE SET of The One Show, the evening's first sofa-surfers are visions in sharp-suited geometry. "Congratulations on the shoe-sock combo, Rod," says host Alex Jones as the camera zooms to the floor for a shot of Sir Rod Stewart's black-and-white-striped winkle-pickers and matching hosiery. "Wicked, innit?" replies the legendary rasper, peacocking in tartan-checked jacket, blond thatch as age-defyingly explosive as ever. "He's the king of the shoe," notes Jools Holland, resplendent in a midnightblue pin-stripe two-piece.

Stewart and Holland are in the central London television studios on the promotional trail in support of their first album together. Swing Fever is a collection of covers of swing-era classics, sung by Later... with Jools Holland presenter's 18-piece live band. There's no musical performance for the BBC early-evening programme - the duo save that for an appearance on Jimmy Fallon's chat show in New York four days later where, dressed in pretty much the same clobber, they perform Almost like Being in Love.

That Lerner and Loewe show tune, composed for the original 1947 Broadway production of Brigadoon and sung in the 1954 film by Gene Kelly, is typical of the 13 tracks on the album. "It was music we were brought up on, wasn't it?" says Stewart, 79, to fellow Londoner Holland, 66.

Lullaby of Broadway is another example. Plucked from the Busby Berkeley musical Gold Diggers of 1935, the Oscar-winning song originally featured what Holland characterises as "500 tap dancers". But when the boogie-woogie piano man suggested they could fake that effect in the recording studio, Stewart was having none of it. So, the singer put out a call for "two-dozen tap dancers, please". Then, in the Essex mansion he shares with his third wife Penny Lancaster - where, I know from a previous visit, there's easily enough room to swing a cat, or a troupe of tappers - the pair gathered the dancers, put mics on their feet and recorded the perfect percussive accompaniment.

Shortly before their teatime appearance on The One Show, Stewart and Holland are in their dressing room. Avoiding talk of the model railway obsession that also bonds the pair (I said I didn't want them derailed or sidetracked), I ask Sir Rod about the genesis of this record, his 32nd album: "I'd already started making a swing album, but it didn't turn out how I wanted it. It was more Frank Sinatra than it was Louis Prima, let's say...

"Nothing wrong with Frank at all, he's the greatest. But the arrangements were very, very polite," Stewart explains of a project that he originally began in Los Angeles with a crack bunch of musicians. "I could see while I was there [in the studio] the guys reading the music. And that's not how I wanted it. It's OK to read the music. But it was stale, and it was white, to be quite honest with you. So I said to myself: now, who can I turn to? And the Right Honourable Jools Holland OBE came up. And Jools will take it from there..."

"Yes, so," nods Holland, already smoothly slotted into the sidekick role, "my side of the story is: the phone rings just before Christmas about three years ago. This voice on other end and I'd met Rod a couple of times - goes: 'Allo mate, it's Rod Stewart here. Ringing to wish you a happy Christmas. Do you want to do a record next year?'

"Within a millisecond I said, 'Yeah, great. See you next year!' Put the phone down and thought, 'Did that really happen?"

"You asked your wife, didn't you?" Stewart says. Then adds, impersonating Holland's wife, "'You silly old sod! You're hallucinating!"

"Yeah! 'Have a nice lie down!'" laughs Holland. "But what Rod's saying is that he wanted it to sound a bit rough around the edges. Well, you've come to the right bloke..."

Sixty years ago this year, a 19-year-old Rod joined the band of British bluesman Long John Baldry - a hard-gigging musician who, a couple of years later, would also provide an early berth for a young, bespectacled keyboard player named Reg Dwight.

Stewart recalls those years of apprenticeship like they were yesterday but laments, "There's no pub rock any more, so it must be so difficult for up-and-coming bands to get good live exposure. Yeah, you can post your videos and see what happens. But most bands have come up that way, whether it's the Stones, the Yardbirds... everyone's come up through what I call the apprenticeship, playing in pubs. I did it. You did it [he nods at Holland]."

> S WELL AS that traditional live pub music scene slowly disappearing with the demise of the British boozer, so are the music TV talent shows that also had their time discovering acts from Harry Styles to James Arthur - although its less easy to imagine Stewart or Elton John appearing on one of those.

"I never watched them," confirms Stewart. "Some great artists have come out of those shows, but I think they've also destroyed lives. People got so far, then they just got pushed out the door and their 15 minutes of fame was over."

As a father of musical kids, Stewart keeps an eye out for up-and-coming talent and how ▷ former model Kelly Emberg – the fourth of Stewart's eight children) – is a singer but, he's told me in the past, has complained about not receiving enough airtime for her latest EP. He explains: "But I said: 'The thing is, Rube, there's so much great music that's come before us, before you, that people still want to hear. So that cuts down your time.' And it goes on and on and on. The amount of music out there!"

When I start to suggest that, of late, we haven't seen any standout British talent like Amy Winehouse and Adele, Stewart interjects, recalling an artist with whom he shared a stage on Holland's New Year's Eve show. "Hold on, I disagree. There was a young lady on the Hootenanny called Raye. She, I think, is the new Amy Winehouse," he says of the 26-year-old Londoner who's nominated for a record-breaking seven Brit Awards at next month's ceremony. "The talent is always going to come through. Good talent will always rise to the top. And as long as Jools has his show, that's where the talent is gonna be."

TEWART, HAS ALSO told me in past interviews that he doesn't watch much TV at all – apart from the news. Has that changed or is that still the case, with the news being so depressing?

"Dunno 'bout you but when I first had a television it was two channels and two knobs, volume and treble, and that was it. But I'm old!

"The news doesn't depress me, to be honest. Everything interests me around the world when it comes to politics. But I'm going to take a note out of Jools's book, because he listens to music while he's working on his trains, so I'm gonna do that, too. Because normally I watch Sky on a big television, then I turn over to CNN, the BBC. I go backwards and forwards on all the channels for the news.

"One great thing about this country," he continues, "unlike America: our TV channels are all neutral. And they tell the truth. They don't in America. CNN is anti-Trump, Fox is pro-Trump – or, it was, I don't know where it stands now."

Television news, of course, will be even more important in this year of general elections on both sides of the Atlantic. Stewart has, rather admirably, been stirred to action by broken Britain, personally filling in potholes in Essex roads and paying for NHS patients' MRI scans. Do we need a change of government to fix these things?

'In my 20s I could stay out all night and sing. Not any more'

"Yes. Without a doubt," the singer fires back firmly. "We're screaming for a third party. This is what America wants, too. You've only got Trump again over there. Biden is too old to defend himself. Trump will kill him – I mean, verbally kill him – when they come up against each other [in debates]. But, yeah, let's give the Labour Party a chance. We've had three Prime Ministers that the people haven't voted for. That's totally wrong."

In 2024, both Stewart and Holland will be busy with their own campaigning. There are a handful of joint shows in support of Swing Fever, but thereafter both are "touring all of this year, more or less", says Stewart. Do they have any pre-tour rituals for keeping those pipes in shape?

"Once the tour starts, obviously they're going to get fatigued. So, what they need is tons and tons of water. And if I do two or three gigs on the trot, I have to have a day's rest with no talking – it's called voice rest. I stay in my room.

"I also warm the vocal cords up, and I warm them down. I'm religious about it. Didn't used to when I was in my 20s. Could stay out all night and still sing. But not any more. It's like being an athlete. The vocal cords are a muscle in your throat. They need to be stretched, watered, warmed up, warmed down, rested, eat the right food..."

Holland laughs, adding, "He hasn't eaten the right food today – he's been on a 24-hour fast!"

"Yeah, but I broke it with a sandwich," Stewart explains, sounding a little disappointed in himself. "I'm cleansing. I also did nine 70-yard sprints. That's my regime! It's for my football, I still love it."

Which prompts my final question for them both. What keeps them – family men, cancer survivors, each with a few bob, retirements well and truly earned – on the road?

"It's just an amazing thing," says Holland. "Somebody said to me the other day: 'You work at lot.' Well, I've never really worked since about 1977."

"Yeah, I don't consider it work," agrees Stewart. "It's the love of the music. Purely the love of getting up on stage. It's the greatest high you could ever have. To send home 15,000 people with smiles on their faces – you can't beat that."

Sir Rod Stewart and Jools Holland will be performing (a song, not ice skating!) on Dancing on Ice on Sunday 25 February at 6.30pm on ITV1. The album Swing Fever is released on Friday 23 February on Warner Music. WOMEN ON THE FRONT LINE

This weekend marks the second anniversary of Russia's invasion of Ukraine. Here, four female broadcasters reflect on their experiences covering conflict

INTERVIEWS BY KATE BATTERSBY

LYSE DOUCET

65, CHIEF INTERNATIONAL CORRESPONDENT FOR THE BBC

Where are you at the moment?

At home in London. There are so many different flashpoints. I've been looking at the Pakistan elections and thinking: "Should I be there?" But you can't go everywhere, so I'm getting ready to go back to Ukraine for the second anniversary. I was last there briefly in November to interview Olena Zelenska, the First Lady. I stay in touch with a family in Kyiv who lived mattress-to-mattress with us in an underground car park. It's important that these things are not just stories to a journalist, but become part of your life.

Now that two years have passed since Russia invaded Ukraine, what memories stay with you? In February 2022 I was at the Munich Security Conference, where all the defence chiefs meet. The buzz was: "Putin invade Ukraine? No, impossible!" Then I flew to Kyiv and late on the 23rd we all went out for dinner as normal. Next day, we woke to that heart-inmouth shock of "Oh, my God, he did it". These moments, smack in the middle of history, are times of great responsibility in journalism.

Is it inevitable that coverage of Ukraine has waned since the 7 October Hamas terror attacks?

This is how journalism goes in the ebb and flow of history; one story always breaks through. Afghanistan has, repeatedly, since 1988. Now it's Gaza, but Ukraine matters too much to leave it lying for a long time. There's a profound sense that Putin's plans go much further.

There has recently been talk of a third world war. Is that really a possibility?

We want a prism to make sense of the tumult of our time. In Ukraine there is trench warfare, which we thought long gone. As we know, the past is never dead; it's not even past.

What are the challenges of reporting amid the rise of deepfakes and AI?

They are the enemy of democracy and freedom.

You have been the BBC's Chief International Correspondent for a decade – have the conflicts you've witnessed affected your mental health?

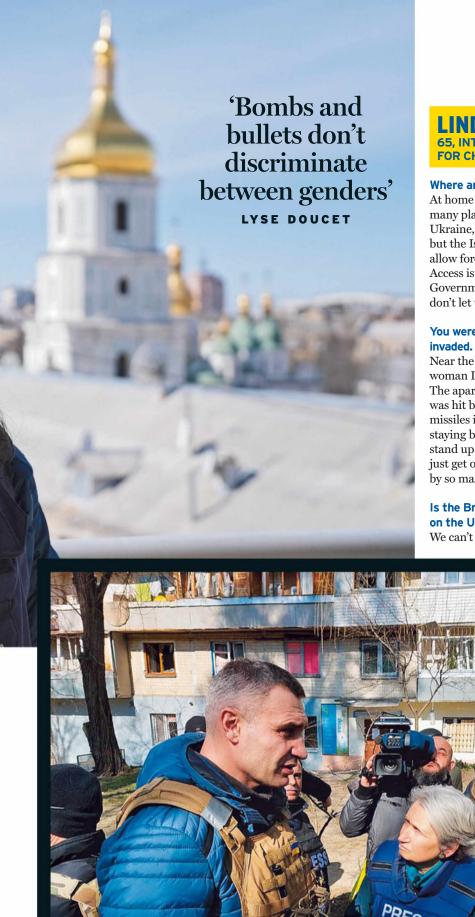

You'd need a heart of stone not to be affected, but I will never experience the depth of my Gazan and Israeli colleagues' suffering. I go to these places as a Canadian national and a resident of London, who can leave again.

Are you able to switch off?

It is all-consuming. Every hour, on the hour, there's something to do. On the Gaza war we have taken breaks, going to the Mediterranean, walking in the gardens of Jerusalem. One night in October I did something I can't ever remember doing [before]: going to the hotel and starting to watch The Queen's Gambit on Netflix. No sooner had I begun than my phone exploded because the Israel land invasion began.

Are there more women war correspondents now?

So many that we should stop thinking about it. It's not just men and women, there are other genders now, too. We need people of all kinds to create more valuable journalism. Bombs and bullets don't discriminate between genders. Some of the best coverage of war crimes, including sexual violence, has been done by men; and some of the best reporting on the bombs and ballistics of war by women.

LINDSEY HILSUM 65, INTERNATIONAL EDITOR FOR CHANNEL 4 NEWS

Where are you at the moment?

At home in London. There are many places I want to be – Sudan, Ukraine, Ethiopia, especially Gaza, but the Israeli authorities won't allow foreign journalists there. Access is an increasing problem. Governments deny us visas or don't let us go where we need to be.

You were in Ukraine when Russia invaded. What are your memories?

Near the start I met Olha, a young woman I've stayed in touch with. The apartment block next to hers was hit by one of the first Russian missiles in Kyiv. Olha said she was staying because it was important to stand up to Putin. That bravery to just get on with your life is shared by so many Ukrainians.

Is the British media right to focus on the Ukrainian perspective? We can't tell the story from the Russian point of view because they won't give us a visa. It's not bias to tell the truth – that Russia invaded Ukraine. But it's valid to ask whether investigative journalists should look more at the corruption issue in the Ukrainian government.

Donald Trump says that if he were US president he could end the war in 24 hours...

My understanding is he would let Russia keep the 20 per cent of Ukraine they have occupied. It would be disastrous for Ukraine. Putin is clearly trying to hold the line in the hope of a Trump win, which is a win for Putin.

Is a third world war a possibility?

I don't think any of the parties in the Middle East or Ukraine want it. The danger is in a mistake; a large number of people killed by something going astray, or Russia hitting a Nato country, on purpose or by mistake. That doesn't seem near to me, but never count it out.

Are there more women war correspondents now?

They're not a newly discovered species – think of Lee Miller, Martha Gellhorn and Virginia Cowles. To cover conflict, you need curiosity about how human beings behave in extreme situations, and calm determination to find out what's really going on. In television you need to understand the value of a team – you're not a lone wolf on a crusade for the truth. I want to be where history is happening.

How do you try to switch off?

I always carry a book of poetry – for me, it's an important part of reflecting on events. And I spend hours pootling around my very small garden. I could win a prize at the Chelsea Flower Show for the largest amount of money spent on the smallest space! I grow very colourful flowers. My aim is beauty.

The dangers of the job are real – the UN says that since 7 October 2023, 122 journalists and media workers have died in Gaza...

The journalists there are exposed to a level of danger I have never experienced. Nowhere is safe. Their bravery is unbelievable, to carry on reporting. You calculate the risk, whether it's worth the reward. It's never straightforward. ▷

EMMA MURPHY

48, SENIOR CORRESPONDENT WITH ITV NEWS

Where are you at the moment?

I'm back home in London after reporting on the first anniversary of the Turkey-Syria earthquake.

You've reported on the region since Russia invaded and annexed Crimea in 2014 what memories of covering the 2022 invasion stay with you?

In the last two years I'm struck by the stoicism and determination of Ukrainian individuals, their national pride, but also the toll the situation takes on them. The night of the attempted Wagner coup on Putin we were in Dnipro, and all seemed normal. Suddenly missiles were coming in, close enough that we went to the shelter for the first time. Our hotel receptionist Anastasia had been so calm in all the while we'd known her, but that night she was crying and crying. Her tears that night stay with me - one of many lives completely hijacked by this situation.

With the eruption of conflict in the Middle East, why is it important to cover Ukraine?

Continuing coverage is essential because this is about people's lives

Do you think a third world war is a possibility?

That term should not be bandied around, but used with the greatest respect to the two World Wars. We are in a very precarious global situation.

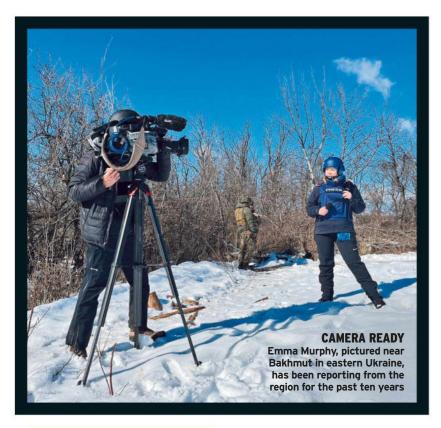

Has your career reporting from war zones taken a toll on your mental health?

You can't go to the front line without appreciating that you are putting yourself in a very grave position; and you don't walk out of those places and forget about them. You have to be mindful of overload. But I have the luxury of leaving, knowing my nieces are sleeping safely in Manchester. They're not in a war zone.

Do female war correspondents face pressures on family life that their male counterparts don't?

I don't have my own kids, but my male colleagues with children face very similar pressures to female colleagues. My own partner died in 2014. Part of my survival and the ongoing process of recovery from his loss has been helped massively by the job that I do. When your own life feels like it has been completely destroyed, it's easier to be in worlds which are themselves in a terrible place than it is to be in a very normal me huge solace. It gives me a

CORRESPONDENT FOR SKY NEWS

Where are you at the moment?

I'm in Baghdad because of rising Middle East tensions, with Iranian-backed militia on Iraqi soil. The whole Middle East is a tinderbox through events in Gaza.

What memories of covering the conflict in Ukraine stav with vou?

I arrived in Ukraine soon after a Sky News team came under fire there. I was smuggled into President Zelensky's office in Kyiv for his first broadcast interview, appealing for global support. Soon after, the Russians were pushed out and Kyiv was saved.

Do you think we are on the verge of a third world war?

I wonder if this is how it felt just before the Second World War. In ten or 20 years, maybe we'll think we're in it right now. The basic tenets are already in place.

How does the rise of fake news affect the work of journalists?

The internet is crowded with fraudsters misinforming people on a gigantic scale. When propagandists are put up as more credible than senior BBC correspondents, we should be worried. Governments are trying to tear down media organisations, infecting the public approach to the mainstream media. Trump was a key instigator. It's a myth too many people are buying into.

Should conflict and international affairs get more airtime?

Definitely. Goat herders in Nepal have phones with internet. Newsrooms need to reflect that.

You were held captive by Taliban fighters in 2010. Has the job affected your mental health?

A healthy amount of anxiety, experience and instinct may keep you alive, but it has tipped over into unhealthy anxiety sometimes. The accumulation of bad moments means that the ways of coping with danger become less effective. You fill up too much, like water in a balloon - at some point you won't be able to keep it in. Sometimes I think that point might be in sight.

Are there particular challenges for a woman on the front line?

Rampant sexism and misogyny! You tend to be underrated, you're not seen as a threat, they come from a position where they can coerce vou. You'll always find brave women in conflict. In Ukraine all the shelters are run by women.

Is your family life impacted more than a male reporter's might be?

It takes a massive toll. My four children fear if I'll come back. They were terrified when I was trying to get into Gaza, crying, "Please don't go there." I don't hear male correspondents saying how upset their children are when they leave.

□ alpha-male status on Gardeners' World, regular, lavish BBC travelogues – Spanish Gardens follows previous trips to Italy, the Adriatic, the US, Japan, France, and other locations around the world – and Amazon Prime streams his 2014–17 garden makeover show Big Dreams, Small Places. Don squats, braces allowing, at the head of British horticultural television, a dominance acknowledged with an uppermiddle-class diffidence that suggests it's as much a surprise to him as it is to us.

In his latest journey, Don covers 4,000 Iberian kilometres over three episodes. Starting in Madrid and then Valencia, he sweeps south through Andalusia before traversing the country's green north and then ducking down into Catalonia. He finds a Spain full of gardens large and small, some lush, others necessarily water-limited, one or two delightfully strange. They range from baroque masterpieces that have been in one aristocratic family for centuries to a contemporary garden themed around an egg.

"We are a nation of garden nerds," he says, "but we love gardening, almost despite the end result. In Spain, you garden in order to make a garden and I think there is a subtle difference there. Sometimes a little bit less gardening and a bit more garden might be better." I think I know what he means, though I might just be intoxicated by the fruity accent that, over 34 years of broadcasting, has set so many trowels trembling.

ESPITE THE gardening-women's-crumpet barbs and a degree of class resentment against posh boys for whom the grass really is always greener (and we'll get to grass presently), Don has a personal history that's slightly more nuanced than the privileged public image. The son of an Army officer, one of five siblings, he disliked his public school (Malvern College) intensely and went, for a while, to a state comprehensive in Hampshire before reading English at Cambridge.

Relations with his father, who suffered PTSD after his wartime experiences, were fraught, but Don, born a service child in Germany, has the good officer's ability to step out of his social class without appearing condescending. In Barcelona, as well as the enthusiastic florist, Don meets a 100-year-old man who grows food crops on his roof, a habit his family developed during the famine caused by the Civil War. This is a gardener for whom growing even a single tomato is a very serious business. "He didn't speak a word of English and my Spanish is terrible, but we really connected," says Don. "In a funny way, we spoke the same language. That happens over and over again. You just know that this is a really significant meeting." And does he like that? "By connecting with other people you become a bigger, better person."

'British gardens are better? Clearly that's nonsense'

Becoming a bigger, better person has been, at times, an uphill struggle for Don. He has talked before of the mental health issues that at one point caused an exasperated Erskine to say she'd leave home with their then young children, Adam, Freya and Thomas, unless he got help. Speaking to the BBC in 2020, he said, "I have, for many years, suffered from depression, which comes and goes but tends to be something that is worse in the winter."

Don is speaking at home in Herefordshire where, since 1991, he has created the garden he calls Longmeadow and where, as he has written, "spring comes slowly". I ask him how he feels today, deep in winter, and he says, "I'm fine. I'm good." From the outside, he appears to have been helped by the gardens he spends his time in, healed by them even, but he claims it's not quite that simple. "I wouldn't say I have been healed. I'd say I am being healed. It's an ongoing process."

Gardens, then, are where Don finds himself but also where he finds other people on often similar journeys of self-realisation. "I don't do the shows just to understand the garden," he says. "I do them to understand the gardener. In the end, people are what really interests me."

N THE SERIES he encounters a pony-tailed, bear-like Basque who designed and planted a tropical garden as his marriage failed, creating a contemporary Eden that now lacks an Eve. "His relationship went disastrously wrong, that garden was created entirely out of the trauma of his life. The point is, all gardens are made by people and, in the end, people are more interesting than plants. That is my absolute starting and finishing point."

Last year, Don told Times Radio that "the logical thing to do is give up Gardeners' World". So it's not surprising that he's perpetually rumoured to be about to leave a show (and he did leave for a while in 2008 after he had a minor stroke) where he potters around Longmeadow giving tips on seasonal jobs. It must seem pallid in comparison to the human ▷

Do interest and drama he encounters on the travelogues. "They are very different − it's apples and oranges," he says. "In the end, I'm a gardener and my life is lived in my garden. To share that through the medium of Gardeners' World is not only a privilege, it's also completely central to who I am and what I do."

CAN HE DIG IT?
Working on his raised vegetable beds at Longmeadow

s I'm discovering, Don is inclined to be contemplative. That, he might argue, is the point of gardening, thinking about the big things, making connections with other people, places and, through them, with history. Spain, where a Moorish caliphate covered much of the country for centuries, allows him to do that. In Majorca he finds "a system of gathering water that goes back to the tenth and the 11th century, still being used!" In Barcelona he visits a Catholic monastery garden that is entirely pre-Columbian everything is planted as it would have been before the discovery of America in 1492. "It's the same plants, the same smell, the same tastes experienced by the people who built those buildings," he enthuses. "It puts what we do into a historical context, which, God knows, we need. We should stop being so absolutist about everything. There are lots of different ways of doing things and your own way is probably not the best."

But don't the British have a reputation for thinking their way of doing things is intrinsically better than anyone else's? Insularity thrives in our gardens, each of us inhabiting our own little nation as we dead-head the geraniums. "The idea of a superior culture is based on ignorance, on not knowing about other cultures. They say an Englishman's home is his castle. I find an Englishman's garden is his farm, or his inner landscape. Your garden or your allotment

'I am being healed. It's an ongoing process'

plot is very personal, and I don't necessarily think that's wrong, but if you then extrapolate that British gardens are better than any other gardens because they're British, clearly that's nonsense.

"I think any kind of little Englander [attitude] or little anything, is reductive – and life is impoverished as a result. But in all my years of doing Gardeners' World and seeing other gardens in Britain, I think it's a minority [who feel that way]. The younger generation coming through are very generous in their attitudes and approaches."

That younger, generous generation could well be attracted to a series that touches on the legacy of Spain's still bitterly divisive Civil War, its lost Islamic culture and the climate emergency that is presently burning up Iberia. The Spanish live in a parched country adapting to extreme climate events that are very possibly heading our way. "We were filming in Seville in April, and it was 42 degrees," he notes. "When it was 42 degrees in the UK a summer and a half ago, it was a kind of national emergency."

It's something, Don says, that we should get better at dealing with. "The only thing that's certain is it's getting warmer, but the actual weather events, other than being more extreme, are variable." Is the typical English garden doomed? "We will grow a lawn and do everything we can to try to keep it going," he says. "And it may well be that lawns will survive, but sometimes you just have to adapt and the downside is it could well be more artificial grass, which I have to say I'm no fan of."

In Andalusia Don finds car parks that have been turned into gardens; in Santander ancient wetlands have been brought back to life. Visiting Valencia he hears how plans for a motorway into the city centre were swapped instead for a linear park. "It was a sort of public uprising. People said, 'No, we absolutely don't want that. We want a green space.' The motorway was scrapped and they made this extraordinary, fantastic park. Now Valencia is saying, 'Right, we want to be the greenest city in Europe.'" o why can't we do projects of that ambition here? "In Spain they are regional projects. Here, it would be like Newcastle or Manchester deciding to do something." Should we decentralise, then, to save ourselves? "I'm all for regional devolution in this country. Instead of everything being controlled from London, you would have, in Cornwall, Cornish ways of managing their coasts or their railways or their environment. Surely, it's so much better to have local authorities dealing with their rivers rather than some kind of central authority which doesn't seem to work."

Until our rivers run clean again, we'll just have to make the best of it but that, says Don, also means change. "You have to adapt your planting to the conditions. The mistake that we make as British gardeners is we go to great lengths to grow things despite the disadvantages. We will be very proud of the fact we grew an ericaceous plant in soil that isn't suitable, or a tender plant when it gets cold. What the Spanish are saying is, that's crazy, because you're going to lose that battle. Focus on what will do well and then make it look good. As a result, the Spanish have a smaller range of plants, but some wonderful gardens."

Some of those gardens touch upon the sublime, moving horticulture in a heavenly direction. In them we see Don at his most monkish, wandering silently through a Basque rainforest or a Moorish water garden, apparently transfixed by their beauty. "I don't practise religion, although I was brought up quite a strict C of E, but I have a very profound spiritual sense of connection with gardens and with the natural world," he says. "We talk a lot today about physical and mental wellbeing; I think there's also spiritual wellbeing." And you get that in gardens? "I get that completely."

HE COMEDIAN ROSIE JONES has entered the building. She arrives in a cluster of bags and scarves and headphones, chatting to everyone en route, then fills the huge conference room where we're doing our interview with her energy.

It's hard not to be swept along with her infectious laughter. The sheer joy of Jones is the reason she has been ubiquitous on television over the past year, appearing on quiz panels, stand-up shows, documentaries and even an episode of Call the Midwife.

"Sorry about that!" she jokes. "I do wake up every day and think, 'God, people are paying me to make jokes. Have I slept in the last six years?' No. But doing a job I love every day and having a positive influence is a dream come true. And I'd like more of the same, so I'll say sorry now for being on your TV a lot again this year."

And what a year it's likely to be as Jones will host her own panel show, Out of Order, the first presenter with cerebral palsy to do so. She will be joined by team captains Katherine Ryan and Judi Love, alongside other comedians who have to order members of the public in a line-up in response to questions such as "Who has been married the most?".

Thanks to love, laughter and a new panel show, life is good for comedian Rosie Jones Jones maintains that she is exactly how she appears on TV. "If you think you know me, you do" – but after sitting with her for more than an hour, I beg to differ. Her comedy persona is cheeky, cheerful and a bit rude, and there is plenty of evidence of that today with a chat peppered with swear words and gags (I say I want to talk to her about her life and "how she got here" to which she replies with a cackle, "I got here on the train").

But there is also a serious brain ticking away, a burning ambition and deep understanding of her industry, as well as a keenness to unapologetically discuss the dark times of her life. Jones, 33, didn't breathe

"But my mum and dad never made me feel like disability was a bad thing. Sure, I couldn't walk, but I'd be on the floor making them all laugh. I was always me."

Jones was bright, academic and enjoyed school but says that she "survived" more than she thrived, conscious that she was known as "the disabled one". Her feeling of otherness was further cemented when she began to question her sexuality.

"When I was growing up, a lesbian was a butch-presenting woman who was sporty and aggressive. A disabled person was a victim, vulnerable, asexual. Those were the images I was presented with. Even when I accepted I was gay, at university, I had no time to think about that: I was too busy working out how I could live independently and what a job would look like for me.

"This is so dark," she adds, "but growing up I was convinced I would die at 18 because I never saw a disabled adult that I could relate to. I'd never seen anyone where I could go, 'She's cool, she lives independently, she's in a normal, healthy, loving relationship.' I thought I'd have a good 17 years and then pop my clogs.

"I nearly died as a baby, so all this is a bonus. If you were to say, 'Rosie, bad news, you're going to die tomorrow' I'd be a bit annoyed because I've got a lovely weekend in Brighton planned but, apart from missing out on some good fish and chips, I would honestly be fine with that."

FTER THE INITIAL surprise of "not being dead" at 18, Jones's first step to independence was reading English at the University of Huddersfield. A drama teacher had advised her to study acting but she refused. "The acting world for a disabled actor was very slim. I didn't want to study for three years to get the odd 'Boohoo, I'm a little disabled lady' role. If I studied English and wrote my own roles, I could have more control over my career."

In 2011, after graduating, she landed a place on Channel 4's production trainee scheme, where she worked as a junior researcher, before taking a comedy writing course at the National Film and Television School. She began writing for shows such as Eight Out of Ten Cats Does Countdown, The Last Leg and Would I Lie to You? – and loved making people laugh.

But while she had enjoyed watching comics like Victoria Wood and Billy Connolly as a child, she never even thought about being a stand-up because, "they were mainly white, straight, fast-talking, upper-class, non-disabled males. I could not be further from that". But as her writing career grew, Jones grew confident enough to try it and a new career was born.

She reached the finals of the Funny Women awards in 2016 and has since appeared on pretty much every panel show going, as well as starring in her own show, the Bafta-nominated Trip Hazard: My Great British Adventure, in which she travels the country with other celebrities.

Last year she made her own documentary, *Rosie Jones: Am I a R*tard?*, in which she addressed the subject of ableism, citing the trolling and abuse she faces on a daily basis on social media and in the street. The makers of the show gave her access to a therapist, and she now has therapy regularly. It has been life-changing.

'When I was growing up, a disabled person was a victim'

"I used to say, 'Hello, I'm Rosie, I'm always happy, I love being disabled, I wouldn't have it any other way,' but through therapy I began to unlock something and realised that being disabled is st sometimes. Sometimes I wish I could walk down the street without feeling every single person glancing at me. I wish I could ring somebody without them patronising me. I wish I could go on a night out without fearing that I could wet myself.

"I have internalised ableism and a reluctance to use mobility aids because if I use a wheelchair, I become more disabled. By being more honest about that, it's almost like I'm opening the wardrobe to a monster and going, 'Oh! It's smaller than I thought it was." Earlier this year Jones gained a whole new league of fans with her performance in Call the Midwife. She played a pregnant character called Doreen, whose boyfriend was accused of molesting her due to a perceived notion that Doreen had no autonomy to have a sex life or become a mother due to her disability.

Jones claps with happiness when I bring up the role. "That relates back to the world that I grew up in," she says. "Just having the power to portray a disabled woman who is in a happy relationship felt so important. I didn't see that when I was a teenager."

AKING THE HELM of Out of Order marks an incredible milestone for Jones, and with her new-found influence, she asked the production company to include a trainee scheme on the show, so that there would be disabled people on set to learn and gain experience. "I'm never a person to shut the door behind me," she says. "I'm so grateful I'm allowed to live my dream, but I'm aware I'm usually the sole disabled person on a TV show, so if I have the power to bring people up with me, I will."

She's also writing and starring in her first sitcom for Channel 4, so while she's busy smashing glass ceilings, I wonder if she fancies another first – appearing on Strictly Come Dancing, already known for having a diverse set of contestants, including amputee Paralympian Jody Cundy and deaf actress Rose Ayling-Ellis.

"I really would," says Jones, "but it's working out in what way. I don't want to be patronised. I would never get a ten, but it's working out how it could work for me." She pauses, with that cheeky glint in her eye. "But trust me – I've got rhythm." EMMA COX

VIVIDLY REMEMBER THE moment the scrapbook chronicling Nicholas Winton's incredible work, saving 669 children from the Holocaust, arrived in the That's Life! production office. He had kept very quiet about his extraordinary rescue operation – bringing children on trains from Prague to Britain on the brink of the Second World War – for almost 50 years, not even discussing it with his beloved wife until they found the scrapbook while decluttering their loft. She realised how crucial the documents would be to those children, so they contacted That's Life! to help trace them.

Turning the pages of the album, seeing photographs of the children Nicky (as I came to call him) had saved and their names – including, alas, the children who didn't survive because they had been taken off the last train when war was declared in 1939 – was incredibly poignant.

Nicky had seen the terrible living conditions of the refugees, most of them Jewish, while on holiday in Prague. Realising it would only be a matter of time before the Nazis invaded Czechoslovakia, he organised – with a tiny team including his mother – British families to foster children and trains to carry them to safety.

Our first step was to ring Nicky himself, but when I congratulated him on his extraordinary achievement, he just said, bleakly, "Not enough." I was devastated that he felt he had failed. I wanted to prove to this extraordinary man that every life he had saved was precious. And of course he had saved many, many precious lives. It has been estimated that now 6,000 people owe their very existence to Nicholas Winton. The Jewish children Nicky rescued were almost the only ones in Czechoslovakia to survive the Holocaust.

Katinka Blackford, one of our researchers, began investigating. She found three of the children, now adults, who had no idea how they had been rescued. When we invited Nicky to our studio we didn't tell him that Vera and Milena would sit either side of him in the audience. It was almost unbearably moving as they turned to him to thank him for their lives. That was the only time in my career when I had to stop recording to wipe away my tears. Afterwards, we were contacted by dozens of viewers who realised for the first time who had saved

In our next episode, I asked all those who owed their lives to him to stand, and Nicky, whom we had seated on the front row, turned to see the whole ground floor of the Television Theatre on their feet.

The first episode aired 36 years ago this month and these moments have been seen millions of times since online. I've watched them from certain death.

STOPPED FILMING TO WIPE MY TEARS'

As she dedicates herself to one last campaign, Esther Rantzen reflects on her career on screen – and the power of TV to change lives for ever them many times myself, and each time find myself deeply moved. So many of those children grew up to achieve so much. Their courage, and the courage of their parents in sending them away to an unknown future, is extraordinary.

I created both programmes to surprise Nicky, hoping that would convince him that he hadn't failed. And meeting "Winton's Children", as those he saved called themselves, gave Nicky enormous pleasure for the rest of his life. He and I stayed in touch, having lunch regularly. He always said he wished humanity would learn the lessons of history. As true today as ever.

FACING THE FUTURE

On his 90th birthday – he died aged 106 in 2015 – he told me he'd made a resolution never to turn down an invitation to try something new. So when he turned 100, one of "Winton's Grandchildren" – the pilot daughter of a boy he had saved – took Nicky up in her microlite. He a said the wind was very draughty up his trouser legs.

I had learnt about the full horror of the Holocaust when I was in my teens, and survivors from the concentration camps began to tell their stories. So I know how immensely lucky I am, as a Jew born in England in 1940. Looking back, I can't remember being affected by antisemitism during my career. Although I do remember in the 1980s attending a charity event, and being given a lift by a member of the House of Lords and his wife in their stretch limo. As I sat down, she said to me,

"What do you think of our Jew Canoe?" I was speechless, so she repeated it. I still couldn't think of an answer. As it happens, I don't know any Jew who travels in a stretch limo. But then I don't know anyone who owns a canoe, either.

Although I owe a great deal to my Jewish background, I'm an agnostic now and I envy those with faith. However, it does worry me that when a Jewish word is used on the BBC it's often mispronounced. For instance, Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish Holy Day, was pronounced wrongly recently. There aren't enough Jews in production teams, perhaps, or in the Pronunciation Unit. If there still is a BBC Pronunciation Unit.

VERYTHING CHANGES, AND the broadcasting landscape has changed immensely since I started out in the industry. My earliest appearance on TV was in a debate on whether women can read the news. I was for it. Where would the news be today without the brilliant women newsreaders?

However, even today, older women are still invisible on television. And it's not just men who dump them. Women themselves are just as much to blame for discriminating against wrinkles. Just look at all the Botox and fillers women on screen have to invest in. If she's over 60 and presents a show, which is rare enough, what woman on TV these days is allowed to look her age? Only Professor Dame Mary Beard?

I blame myself, too. Once upon a time, I was on the cover of Radio Times (actually more than once, pardon my boasting). And there I was, back in 1988, dressed in a white satin suit, looking absolutely beautiful. Not because of what nature had given me, but because of the glorious retouching. Some kind person enlarged my eyes, shrank my teeth, smoothed my skin; ▷

□ you name it, they'd improved it. Unfortunately, years later, when I was giving a Ted Talk and put that picture on the screen, it was greeted with hoots of laughter. So rude!

I've said that if I had embarked on my career a few generations later, I might not have been successful because I wasn't nearly pretty enough. Today, the expectation to look a certain way – tall, skinny, streaky blonde – is improving. The fact that Alison Hammond is flavour of the month proves that talent and personality can prevail. And Claudia Winkleman's fringe does its bit for emancipation, too.

Looking back, I have had moments of regret – for instance, turning down the opportunity to become the BBC's first woman channel controller in the 1980s. But when it was offered, I had a very long conversation with my late husband, Desmond Wilcox, and he thought what I really found most rewarding was getting involved with the stories we told on That's Life!, and following them through. Being a controller would mean delegating that to other people – commissioning programmes, but not making them. And of course I was working very hard for Childline, too, which I might have had to give up.

o, I went to see Bill Cotton, managing director of BBC Television, who had suggested me for the job, with two letters in my handbag – one accepting the job, one thanking him but declining it. Until the moment came, I had no idea which letter I would pull out to give him.

In the end I chose thanks, but no thanks. Since then I have sometimes felt like an awful wimp. But in the next series of That's Life! we investigated a boarding school owned by a paedophile who employed paedophile staff, and because of our report the teachers were arrested, convicted and sent to prison and the school was closed down. So good did come out of my wimpiness.

That's Life!, which aired on the BBC for 21 years from 1973 to 1994, showed just how powerful television can be. Among our campaigns, we launched Childline, transformed children's playgrounds and told the story of Ben Hardwick who became the first British child to receive a life-saving liver transplant after we reported that, without it, he had only a couple of weeks to live. As one of the few wives and mothers who were also producers, I often found myself dealing with subjects involving children. But there's still much to be done.

It's 37 years since we launched Childline (my daughter, Rebecca Wilcox, is training to be a volunteer Childline counsellor and finding it incredibly rewarding), but from the problems today's children tell Childline about, I'm still hugely concerned about their welfare. There is an epidemic of eating disorders, of self-harm, of mental health issues afflicting our young people. Why are British children so much more unhappy, less healthy, than children in other countries? For the sake of our future, things need to change.

Social media giants need to take much more responsibility for the content young people can access. Parents need far more support than they get. Bring back Sure Start centres for pre-school children. Don't assume children evolved to spend eight hours a day sitting facing forward at little desks having their heads stuffed with facts

'What woman over 60 on TV is allowed to look her age?'

– give them the play and adventure they need to grow and learn. If That's Life! were on the air at the moment, our viewers would demand that we campaign on their children's behalf.

Why were we so influential in our time? We had two amazing weapons. One was the trust the public placed in us (I hope we lived up to it); the other was our enormous audience, 15 to 20 million viewers at our peak, which meant the decision-makers, including prime ministers, watched us because they knew everyone else did. It's much harder to have the same influence when audiences are fragmented and so much smaller, although the ITV drama Mr Bates vs the Post Office shows it can still be done. The revealing Channel 4 series To Catch a Copper, in which the brave Chief Constable in Avon and Somerset has given a film crew access to the unit that investigates possible police misconduct, is another series that I hope creates change.

GLAMOUR SHOT Esther Rantzen credits RT with making her look "absolutely beautiful"

Good journalism is as crucial as ever. Today we live in a world of fake news, vitriolic social media, malevolent conspiracy theorists and bigotry. The BBC is often criticised because it has a responsibility to the public who pay for it. Somehow, through a jungle of misreporting, the BBC needs to tread a careful, objective path.

We viewers need it desperately, but I'm not confident about the BBC's future. How do we fund the BBC going forward, to ensure it's available to everyone, and free of government interference? And stays confident enough to fend off the attacks by competitors in the media who are jealous of its place in the public's hearts and minds? Those are vital questions.

AVING BEEN DIAGNOSED with stage four lung cancer, I'm now, at the age of 83, dedicated to a new campaign close to my heart – to change the law on assisted dying. I'm optimistic about the prospect of that being legalised within ten years because there is now a huge majority of the public in favour of change.

The law at the moment just doesn't work. Anyone supporting change should please, please, write to their MP. I've signed up to Dignitas – and going to Zurich is still an option I'm considering if my life gets unendurable. However, if I ask my children to come with me, so I can say goodbye surrounded by my nearest and dearest, when they return they still risk being charged with conspiring to murder me. When in fact, although they support my right to choose, it is entirely my decision.

People often ask people like me who are staggering towards the finishing post how, and if, I would like to be remembered? My answer is, with love and laughter, that would be wonderful.

And to the follow-up question, is there anything I'm proud of? That's more difficult, because in everything I've done and worked for, I've had an amazing team to support and inspire me, so I really can't claim the credit. But I admit I am very proud of my scrambled eggs.

SIX NATIONS RUGBY

AIM TO WIN, NOT TO PLEASE

Pragmatism and points mean more than flamboyant failure, says Simon Barnes

ENGLAND BEGAN THE Six Nations tournament by telling us they were going to entertain the world, but this weekend they head for Scotland and I have a sneaky feeling that they're not going to play like the Harlem Globetrotters.

England went through traumas last year: losing to Fiji, being booed by a sparse Twickenham crowd, and enduring a 53–10 beating at home to France. Now they have announced a relaunch, but unambiguous signs of recovery have been few and far between.

So far in this year's Six Nations, England have come from behind twice, beating Italy in Rome and Wales at Twickenham. In the latter match they showed that there is more to pleasing spectators than simply playing Hey Jude at a million decibels during injury breaks.

'The truth is, sporting excellence isn't always entertaining'

England began the match by trying a few passes out wide, but they won it by going back to the old risk-averse kicking game. Pundit Matt Dawson, part of England's World Cup-winning side of 2003, said, "I don't think any players of my generation ever aspired to be an England player to entertain the nation. It was about winning games."

The truth is, sporting excellence – as embodied by that 2003 side – isn't always entertaining. But it is invariably enthralling. And when England were down to 13 men against Wales and scored a try, we had one of those moments you watch sport for. Ben Earl charged out from the back of a scrum under the posts and burst through five Welsh players to touch down.

Scotland have beaten England on the past three occasions and Earl has been talking about the need to "right some wrongs". But it's Scotland who go into Saturday's match with a sense of grievance. They thought they had a winning try against France in the most recent round of the Six Nations, but it wasn't given.

And if we're going to talk about England's risk-averse kicking game, it's only fair to spare some admiration for Scotland's fly half Finn Russell. He was frustrated by his team's reluctance to listen to him during the first match of the championship, when they came close to blowing a 27-point lead. But Scotland tend to find something extra when it's England. Perhaps it's the weekend to bring out the Glenmorangie.

ARLIER ON SATURDAY,
Wales are up against Ireland, who have been the team to watch this season. Jack Crowley has taken over from the sainted Johnny Sexton at fly half and is doing a damn good job. Ireland beat France in Marseille in what already looks like the match of the tournament. (Which begs the question, "So why did they schedule it first?")

Ireland are on course to become the first team to complete successive Six Nations grand slams. Wales go to Dublin to try to stop them but, well, make mine a Guinness. Ireland showed their defensive skills when they beat Italy 36–0.

The fact is that five of the six nations went into this tournament fresh from a disappointing World Cup. The exception is England, who were beaten narrowly by South Africa, having reached the semi-finals by way of the softest draw imaginable – but it was a result that failed to heal the harms done earlier. We really have six relaunches, but England are making a parade of theirs.

There are good reasons for a more expansive game plan, with more passes to bring in the wingers, or attempts to beat a man rather than run into contact or keep kicking the ball to the opposition. Entertaining the crowd isn't one of them. The point is that purposeful, imaginative play opens up the opposition.

When the England of 2003 gave the ball to Jason Robinson for another twinkling run, they weren't thinking about entertainment. Robinson's running was the difference between victory and defeat. It was pure sporting excellence – and that, believe it not, is what sporting people watch sport for.

SINAIT THE BOYS FROM BYKER

For nearly 30 years, Ant and Dec have been omnipresent on TV. How long can the magic last?

SOMETIME IN THE mid-1990s, my pal Richard went home to find his mum happily watching a new BBC children's show. When he queried this strange turn of events, she pointed at the TV, saying, "These two are good. They're like Morecambe and Wise."

Nearly 30 years later, "these two" return this week with the 20th series of Saturday Night Takeaway – a primetime smorgasbord of sketches, competitions, chats with celebrity guests, general family fun. Nothing atom-splitting in the mould of weekend evening entertainment, until you factor in the special sauce – the Geordie duo at the heart of it all.

So many presenters have been and gone from our screens in the intervening decades, it's worth

'Without them, you're casting your nets and hoping for the best'

returning to one of my favourite topics over a Coke and crisps: what is Ant and Dec's magic ingredient, and can it ever be copied?

At the root of it all is their genuine, long-lasting, tried-and-tested friendship. You see it on I'm a Celebrity... and Britain's Got Talent when one of them goes off-script, and the other one corpses in delight. I've seen it in pubs along the Thames in west London where they both hang out, choosing to spend Sunday afternoons with one another's friends, families and dogs. And you saw it when Ant had what would have been grateful for Dec, who professed himself not angry but disappointed, even while he clocked up 90 per cent of the effort for their joint NTA award that year. They now have 44 of these things; I'm amazed anyone else turns up.

and emerged freshly

We can hold the value of that bond up against equally charismatic solo stars, such as Michael McIntyre and James Corden. Both gifted at holding an audience – or an American one in the latter's case, at least – but both have to strive much harder to prove their authenticity. Meanwhile Ant and Dec can just continue bouncing off each other. They keep each other real, and their mutually appreciative laughs make it easy for us to laugh, too. And it helps that neither is over-tall, and both have their hair.

But while their ordinariness is key to their appeal, behind all the capers are a pair of tireless workhorses. They've barely been off the box in all that time, and their rehearsal hours are legendary. Plus, they share a business savviness, a keen sense of their place in the firmament – from children's TV to teenage pop stardom, to family favourites – eye-rolling at the absurdity of primetime entertainment, while simultaneously committing full throttle to its perennial requirements. Tune in to the game show Limitless with its element of chance, and watch them as clueless but excited as the contestants. It's a masterclass in audience connection, and it takes an awful lot of effort to look that effortless.

HEY HAVE HAD their share of duds – Red or Black, anyone? – but they also know when to jump ship. They've pulled the plug on Takeaway, tagging this the last series, while ratings remain high and their light undimmed. Both have families now, and part of being the life and soul of the party is knowing when to put your coat on.

Which leads us to the tricky question – how can ITV begin to future-proof for the day when the pair decide they've had enough? While they continue to volunteer for projects, it's a knotty problem for their bosses: if these two sign on, you'll have the nearest thing to a guaranteed hit. Without them, you're casting your nets and hoping for the best. Ant and Dec may prove to be our last great all-round entertainers – at least until Richard's mum spots someone else.

Ant and Dec's Saturday Night Takeaway is on Saturday at 7.00pm on ITV1

DRAMA Everything Is Fine

All 8 episodes available Wednesday

There's a hint of This Is Us about this new French drama, which recognises that traumatic events ripple out to affect everyone connected to them. When a nine-year-old Parisian girl is diagnosed with leukaemia, her family members react in different ways: some carry on as normal, others are deeply affected and at least one enters a full-life crisis. The series takes time to explore each story, with a likeable cast striking a bittersweet balance between comedy and tragedy. You might recognise faces from The Bureau and House of Gucci. JS

Nico Parker (The Last of Us) shines in this tender tale about a family in crisis. She plays teenager Doris, whose terminally ill brother Max (Cree Kawa) is transferred to a hospice for end-of-life care. Laura Linney co-stars as her frazzled single-parent mother and Woody Harrelson provides low-key support as the widower Doris befriends. The film is inspired by writer/director Laura Chinn's own experience of her brother having brain cancer. While this lends it authenticity, the drama isn't always as hard-hitting as it could be. COMEDY

The Completely Made-Up Adventures of Dick Turpin

Eps 1 and 2 available Friday

The legend of the 18th-century English highwayman is fuel for a jolly period comedy that pitches itself somewhere between Horrible Histories and Our Flag Means Death. Noel Fielding is Dick, the son of a butcher who, in this telling, is a vegan who is reluctant to kill animals. Rejected by his father, he accidentally joins a gang of thieves before accidentally becoming their leader, which brings him to the attention of preening lawman Jonathan Wilde (Hugh Bonneville). Some well-played silliness - such as the scene where Wilde reluctantly brings his misbehaving young son with him to work - and a great supporting cast make it a fun ride. Js

PERIOD DRAMA The New Look

Episode 5 available Wednesday

There have been many affecting. gut-wrenching moments this series, yet none has carried as much weight as one scene in this episode, when Christian Dior (Ben Mendelsohn) arrives at a train station hoping to be reunited with his sister Catherine (Maisie Williams). As families gather with flowers, hope and cheers of joy to greet loved ones, what happens next is quietly devastating. It's catchyour-breath television. Coco Chanel (Juliette Binoche), meanwhile, is at a Swiss hotel. In an unexpectedly comic escapade, she finds herself in a situation where money and status are of no use. FRANCES TAYLOR

SCI-FI Constellation

Episode 4 available Wednesday

We can but hope that Constellation will come good and reveal its secrets in the end. Because, currently, it's determined to be as wilfully obscure as possible. Take this hour, which posits several theories as to why Jo (Noomi Rapace) is behaving oddly. from "astronaut burnout" and PTSD to psychosis requiring medication. But there are hints that something more sci-fi is at play, with Jo seen jumping from what appears to be one timeline to another, as though she's able to witness events across several dimensions. It's all a bit of a head-scratcher, but intriguing nonetheless. DAVID BROWN

WAR DRAMA Masters of the Air

Episode 7 available Friday

A relatively sedate episode, but one full of satisfying little dramas. For the most part we're inside the PoW camp with Bucky (Callum Turner) and friends, where the issues of the day are how to secretly build a working radio and what exactly is in that stew everyone's eating. Back at base, the missions handed to the Bloody 100th are, as the end of the war draws near, even more dangerous than they were at the start. For the senior officers who have seen so many men come and go, there's a decision to be made about how much danger they put themselves in. JS

In 1991, investigative journalist Danny Casolaro told friends he was visiting Martinsburg in West Virginia to meet a source for a story about "The Octopus", a network of eight extremely powerful individuals who had raised eyebrows in America in the years before. A group of aerophobics try to conquer their fear of flying on a trip to Iceland in this guirky, lowkey comedy. Timothy Spall is an exsoldier who brings his training into action, while Lydia Leonard plays a neurotic property developer. The first English-language film from Icelandic writer/director Hafsteinn Gunnar Sigurdsson (Under the Tree) is a strange mix of farcical plotting and Scandi-noir visuals. There are fine performances and delightfully daft moments of character-based weirdness, but the film never quite takes off. DG

Also, running rather short this evening are the fuses – not just for some of the Gladiators (sorry, "Glads"), but the contenders, too. FILM REVIEWS

FILM OF THE DAY

The Commitments $\star\star\star\star$ 10.15pm-12.05am BBC2

MUSICAL DRAMA Alan Parker's film scooped Bafta awards for best film, best direction and best adapted screenplay, while the soundtrack sold like hot cakes. Based on the novel by Roddy Doyle, it tells the story of a group of young Dubliners forming a soul band. It's laced with Irish charm and blessed with superb musical numbers sung by the likes of Andrew Strong, Bronagh Gallagher, Angeline Ball and Maria Doyle. It's also very funny, especially during the band auditions, and it's only a shame that the film didn't make bigger stars of its cast. DAVID PARKINSON (UK 1991, swearing, HD)

The Spiderwick Chronicles ***

1.15-3.05pm C4

FANTASY Goblins, trolls and griffins populate this fun-scary adventure. Freddie Highmore takes on a dual role as twins who move into a creepy mansion with their sister (Sarah Bolger) and mum (Mary-Louise Parker), where they discover a hidden world. Children who aren't afraid of being a bit scared will find it gripping. JAMIE RUSSELL (US 2008, some violence, HD)

The Red Shoes 1.30-3.40pm BBC2

ROMANCE In her film debut,

Moira Shearer stars as the ballerina whose life is torn between a career with impresario Anton Walbrook and marriage to young composer Marius Goring. This opulent masterpiece from Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger is one of the best-loved dance films of all time. Also showing on BBC4 on Thursday. ADRIAN TURNER (UK 1948. HD)

Space Jam ★★★ 3.25-5.15pm ITV2 U

COMEDY In this lively family romp, American basketball star Michael Jordan acts alongside the entire Warner Bros cartoon catalogue. Aliens from an ailing intergalactic theme park want Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck et al to be their new attraction. So the animated superstars challenge their would-be captors to a game of basketball, increasing their odds by kidnapping Jordan. SUE ROBINSON (US 1996, HD)

Outbreak ★★★★

6.25-9.00pm 5 Star

THRILLER Dustin Hoffman stars here as an army medic trying to save the world from a lethal virus imported into America from Africa. You could read this as an Aids allegory, but it also works well as a ticking-clock thriller with conspiracy overtones. Das Boot director Wolfgang Petersen marshals it all along superbly, TONY SLOMAN (US 1995, edited for content, HD)

We're the Millers $\star\star\star$ 15 9.00-11.10pm ITV2

COMEDY Jason Sudeikis stars here as a pot dealer who owes thousands to old buddy Ed Helms, now a major drug kingpin. To settle the debt he agrees to smuggle weed across the border, recruiting a stripper (Jennifer Aniston) and two teens to pose as his family. Sudeikis and Aniston are a good pairing, but the standout is Will Poulter as their nerdy fake son. TERRY STAUNTON (US 2013, swearing, HD)

WAR This Bafta-nominated film unfolds against the backdrop of the Bosnian War's 1995 Srebrenica massacre. Jasna Djuricic plays a UN translator and schoolteacher who is desperate to secure the safety of her family while carrying out her professional duties. Jasmila Zbanic's devastatingly humane drama has all the tension of a thriller. EMMA SIMMONDS (Bosnia/Austria/ Rom/Neth/Ger/Pol/Fr/Nor/Tur 2020. violence, swearing, drug abuse, HD)

THRILLER After moving to Hollywood, young marrieds Jason Bateman and Rebecca Hall bump into one of Bateman's old acquaintances, Joel Edgerton. Soon he is perpetually on the couple's doorstep, apparently seeking closure for something that Bateman swears he can't remember. The film cleverly builds its sense of unease. CRAFT The Great Pottery Throw Down

7.45pm C4Catch up via C4 streaming
Last week's challenge – to make a porcelain sculpture that was illuminated from within and told a personal story – was an emotional one. It wasn't only the famously lachrymose Keith Brymer Jones who was welling up, but several of the potters, too.

There must be something about creating an object from clay – or as Keith says "watching imagination come to life" – that triggers the tears in a way that baking a cake or sewing a dress doesn't seem to do.

This time the remaining five potters are making vintage-style water filters. Expect a few tears from those who secure a place in the semi-final. JANE RACKHAM

MUSIC Inside Classical

8.00pm BBC4 Catch up via iPlayer The New World symphony – or, more formally, From the New World – was catapulted out of its classical niche in 1973 when a segment featured in a Ridley Scott-directed advertisement for Hovis bread. Yet, it was inspired by spirituals and Native American melodies, was wildly acclaimed at its 1893 Carnegie Hall premiere and Neil Armstrong listened to it in space.

All these years later, in the capable hands of conductor Ben Gernon and the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra, the Czech composer Antonin Dvorak's best-regarded work still swells and soars with stately beauty. It follows another treat where Jennifer Pike, winner of the BBC's Young Musician in 2002, joins the orchestra to tackle Max Bruch's First Violin Concerto.

Death in Paradise

9.00pm BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer

A power cut comes at the worst moment for Neville. As he's typing away to his online admirer, a sentence autocorrects from "I try to be as evocative as I can" to "I try to be as erotic as I can". He hits send, panics and then his screen winks out along with the lights.

But though Nev's shock is palpable, it's nothing compared with the one felt by this week's victim, who has stumbled into a transformer at a power station. But what (or should that be "watt") was he doing there? As it turns out, there are links to a computer repair shop over the road — though Neville fails to ask them how to disable an autocorrect function, which is surely a missed opportunity. DAVID BROWN

DRAMA Trigger Point

9.00pm ITV1 Full series via ITVX
Alex (Tomiwa Edun) has been the Deep Throat of Trigger Point and tonight, he has the same advice that the Watergate mole issued in All the President's Men: follow the money.
His words result in the team realising that there may be more to the bombing campaign than the machinations of the woman known only as Suspect A.

But the EXPO officers may have to carry out the rest of their investigation without Lana (Vicky McClure), who's starting to realise that everyone around her comes to an incendiary end. But might it be the case that she has a shorter fuse than the explosives she's tasked with neutralising? Commander Francis (Julian Ovenden), for one, ought to be braced for impact. DB

FACTUAL Into the Congo with Ben Fogle

9.00pm Channel 5 Catch up via My 5

After the warm smiles and party vibe of last week's opener, this episode delves into the harsher, grittier side of the Congo – from deforestation to the horrors inflicted by colonialism.

"The Congo is confusing me," says Ben after a run-in with a "bushmeat" seller. And you can understand why. This must be one of the most extreme environments he's encountered in all his years of travelling. And this time, he's mixing with the indigenous people, rather than those adapting from an urban, Western lifestyle. Highlights include a meditative wild gorilla tracking expedition, where Ben tries his best Attenborough whisper. GARY ROSE

DOCUMENTARY Ukraine: War from the Air

9.00pm National Geographic Catch up via Now

It's two years since Russian troops invaded Ukraine; this documentary was made a year or so ago (and first shown in 2023), so watching it offers a strange perspective.

The footage of drone strikes, land battles and ruined cities remains powerful, but it feels uneasy to see the sense of optimism around Ukrainian forces and their initial success in repelling the invasion. The outcome may now hang in the balance amid Russian gains and as international support wavers. The sequences here on the destruction of Mariupol and the battle for Kharkiv are a reminder of what has already been sacrificed. DBu

DRAMA The Dry

10.20pm ITV1 Catch up via ITVX

Shiv (Roisin Gallagher) is managing to stay sober, but there's one addiction she's struggling to give up: ex-boyfriend, Jack (Moe Dunford). The fact he has a pregnant girlfriend – who happens to be Shiv's new boss – isn't a deterrent, either. Funnily enough, the "moral inventory" that sponsor Karen (Janet Moran, who steals every scene) asked her to work on is still a blank piece of paper.

Caroline (Siobhán Cullen) is pushing ahead with her engagement, despite it having more red flags than a dangerous beach, while dad Tom (Ciarán Hinds) delivers an emotional monologue of depth and substance in a drama that can sometimes lack both. FRANCES TAYLOR

Bent fries his best Attenborough whisper. GARY ROSE been sacrificed. DBu PAST TENSE Midwife Joyce Highland (Renee Bailey) meets an erstwhile acquaintance

DRAMA Call the Midwife

8.00pm BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer

They entered Nonnatus House as pupils and are now newly minted midwives: yes, Nurses Highland and Clifford have taken possession of their maroon cardigans and are qualified to see patients. And what a first shift it turns out to be, with Joyce encountering an unwelcome face from her past and Rosalind aiding a mum-to-be who has little knowledge of how she became pregnant, never mind the complexities of giving birth.

Both stories serve as a reminder that happiness can prove to be fleeting – something that's uppermost in the mind of Trixie too, as she and Matthew attempt to navigate an uncertain future following recent revelations about the poor state of the family's finances. Once contented, they're both now conflicted, especially when a fresh opportunity comes Matthew's way. DB

DAY

■ The Rescue

9.00-10.45pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY This film from the Academy Award-winning directors of Free Solo recounts an audacious act of heroism. When a football team of Thai schoolboys and their coach get trapped in a colossal cave system after freak monsoon rains fall, even attempting to locate them seems like suicide. Yet that's the mission facing British cave divers John Volanthen and Rick Stanton (above), plus various Thai Navy SEALs, members of the US military and others. Unfolding with the urgency of breaking news. The Rescue tells a complex story in a tense, accessible way. MATT GLASBY (UK/US 2021, swearing, HD)

The Fourth Protocol ★★ 1.00-3.40pm Drama

SPY Before getting his big break as 007, Pierce Brosnan played a dastardly Russian agent out to blow up a US air base in England in this Cold War thriller. Michael Caine is the less-than-super agent trying to stop him, and a familiar cavalcade of British actors (plus the odd American) is on hand to help or hinder him. JOHN FERGUSON (UK 1987, edited for content, HD)

Doctor Zhivago 2.00-5.05pm BBC2

EPIC David Lean's sweeping screen version of Boris Pasternak's weighty novel finds the master director at the height of his powers. At its centre is the doomed romance between married doctor Omar Sharif and dressmaker's daughter Julie Christie, which plays out against the backdrop of the Great War and the Russian Revolution. DAVID PARKINSON (US 1965, some swearing, HD)

■ Missing Link ★★★★ 3.00-4.30pm BBC1 PG

ADVENTURE This ripping Victorian-era yarn follows English explorer Sir Lionel Frost (voiced by Hugh Jackman) as he treks to the Himalayas to find a Bigfootlike beast. Produced by cartoon house Laika (Coraline, Kubo and the Two Strings), this hilarious adventure boasts plenty of dizzving Looney Tunes action and Keystone Cops slapstick. ANDREW COLLINS (Can/US 2019, HD)

Hairspray ★★★★ 7.45-10.00pm ITV2

MUSICAL This adaptation of the Broadway hit (itself based on John Waters's 1988 cult movie) stars Nikki Blonsky as Tracy Turnblad, a 1960s Baltimore teen attempting to become a featured dancer on a local TV show. With its catchy songs and slick routines, this is simply irresistible, with John Travolta joining in the fun as Tracy's mother, Edna. ALAN JONES (US 2007, sexual references, discriminatory themes, HD)

Sherlock Holmes: a Game of Shadows ★★★ 12

MYSTERY Robert Downey Jr.

9.00-11.35pm 5 Star

is back as the famous sleuth, and much like the original film, the results are more comic book than Conan Dovle, It's 1891, and Holmes and Watson (Jude Law) travel across Europe to stop Professor Moriarty (Jared Harris) from kickstarting the First World War early. Played with gusto by the cast, this is eminently watchable. BRIAN PENDREIGH (US 2011, violence, brief nudity, HD)

DRAMA This striking true-life tale revisits the scandal that ruined Edward Kennedy's presidential ambitions in 1969. Jason Clarke plays the last scion of the US political dynasty, whose involvement in the death of campaigner Mary Jo Kopechne (Kate Mara) unleashed a press feeding frenzy. Bruce Dern steals the film as patriarch Joe Kennedy, JEREMY ASPINALL (Swe/US 2017, swearing, HD)

DOCUMENTARY Baftanominated Christopher Sharp and Moses Bwayo risked their lives to chronicle the 2021 Ugandan presidential election for this compelling film. Incumbent Yoweri Museveni anticipated victory, but underestimated rival Robert Kyagulanyi Ssentamu, aka rapper Bobi Wine. You'll be infuriated and inspired by what unfolds. DP (UK/Uganda/US 2022, violence, swearing, HD)

Kong: Skull Island ★★★★ 11.05pm-1.20am C5

ADVENTURE Hollywood's most iconic primate returns in this action-packed yarn. In 1973, a ragtag team (including colonel Samuel L Jackson, photographer Brie Larson and scientist John Goodman) journeys to the island that is the lair of Kong and other beasties. Naturally, events don't follow the visitors' plans, and they soon find themselves in peril. TERRY STAUNTON (US 2017, violence, swearing, HD)

George Clarke's Remarkable Renovations

8.00pm C4 Catch up: C4 streaming
Back on home turf after his recent Americana trip, George Clarke has a look at some unique homes that are being created from unused or unloved buildings. They can be former banks, police stations, stables, electrical substations or – in this case
– a "knackered" village shop. He's in Thorner, near Leeds, where single mum Dawn bravely hopes to convert the place (all 1970s false ceilings, strip lighting and naff shelving units)
into a spacious family home.

Whatever the problems and eventual outcome with these renovations, they're fascinating to watch. They might even inspire you to do some DIY. JR

DRAMAThe Way

9.00pm BBC1 Full series on iPlayer There's much lifted from the Covid playbook here. Lockdowns, one hour of exercise per day and testing all feature, but Michael Sheen, James Graham and Adam Curtis's doomsday drama now leans even more heavily into its surrealism and dystopia.

Owen (Callum Scott Howells) is struggling with the effects of drug withdrawal (and has a conversation with a stuffed bear in the process) as the Driscolls become fugitives desperate to escape the country. The comparison with the plight of refugees around the world is overt, with the Welsh now treated with derision and suspicion. In order to survive, the family will need to stick together; something that becomes increasingly difficult as old familial wounds tear open. FRANCES TAYLOR

DOCUMENTARY

The Space Shuttle That Fell to Earth

9pm BBC2 Full series via iPlayer

The final part of this excellent series is as detailed and gripping as the others. It's also moving on a human level, as members of the astronauts' families recall the day in 2003 that the space shuttle Columbia broke apart on re-entry and they returned to homes they had decorated to welcome back loved ones. Striking images show debris scattered across east Texas.

Most of the episode then explores the crash investigation and what it revealed about failings in Nasa's culture. As a case study of groupthink and the reluctance to embrace dissent, it's hard to beat: "the failure to imagine failure," as one investigator puts it. DAVID BUTCHER

The British Airways Killer

9.00pm (Wed 11.15pm in Wales) ITV1 Catch up via ITVX

"Everyone loved her... except her husband," says Joanne Simpson's mother. In 2010 Robert Brown, a long-haul pilot, handed himself in to the police after reporting a domestic incident, but initially refused to answer questions about his estranged wife's disappearance. He was found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to 26 years in prison.

Through police interview footage and comments by Jo's friends, family and the investigating officers, this two-parter explores what happened to the woman Robert coldly referred to as "Princess Perfect". Hearing one of their young children describing what they heard is harrowing. The second part is on Thursday. JR

Our Flag Means Death

10.00pm (Wed 11.15pm in N Ireland) BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer

Can Stede (Rhys Darby) and Ed (Taika Waititi) rebuild their love? The new phase of their relationship starts rockily when Ed awakes from a coma and immediately headbutts Stede flush in the face, and there are further issues when Stede's crew remind him that they all harbour a murderous hatred for the love of his life. With Ed distinctly stand-offish, intervention is required, and it comes from the comedy staple of a visit to a couple whose marital problems are much, much worse.

Minnie Driver and Rachel House put in storming guest turns as antique dealers who struggle to get through a dinner party without literally killing each other. JACK SEALE

Johnny Vegas: Carry On Glamping

10.00pm C4 Catch up: C4 streaming

A travel journalist has given the quirky glamping site at Melbourne Hall a favourable review and it's open to paying guests. So Johnny Vegas and assistant Bev now turn their attention to organising a Star Wars-themed wedding.

Presiding over it as Obi-Wan Kenobi is another of Johnny's dreams, but his plans are overly ambitious, and he has no concept of budget or time management, so it gets as heated as a lightsaber... especially when Johnny tries on his Jedi costume. The wedding (with a massive cake shaped like the Death Star Trench Run) is both bonkers and fun – much like this whole series. JR

Waterloo Road

10.40pm (Tue 11.10pm in N Ireland) BBC1 Full series on iPlayer

Long-term fans get a nice little reward in this final episode – and by long-term, I'm talking those who were watching in 2008, as that was the last time we saw Chlo's sister Mika. But she's back tonight and venting spleen about Donte's fledgeling relationship with Nicky.

Someone else with a lot to say is Serena Michelle, who's arguing that headteacher Kim needs to compromise on her principles if she wants to succeed. But Kim isn't about to abandon the likes of Schuey for the sake of the school ranking high on some Excel spreadsheet. And it's lucky for him that she has the courage of her convictions. DAVID BROWN

Out of Order

9.00pm Comedy Central Catch up via Now

NEW SERIES Comedian Rosie Jones is in typically anarchic form as the host of this so-so new game show, which is set around the idea of putting people in the correct order. The first round, for instance, tasks team captains Katherine Ryan and Judi Love with ranking, from most likely to least, who among five audience members has taken the most sickies from work.

Tonight's episode features guest panellists Richard Osman and comedian Chris McCausland, who – he admits – is not great at judging by appearance. The tables are turned, however, when one punter is offered the chance to win £1,000 if they can place the celebs in the precise order of who drinks the most alcohol. We'll leave you to ponder which famous face proudly comes out on top.

All the Money in the World $\star\star\star$ 9.00-11.45pm Great Movies

THRILLER The kidnapping of John Paul Getty III, teenage heir to his grandfather's multi-billion-dollar fortune, was one of the biggest news stories of the 1970s. Ridley Scott's film stars Michelle Williams as the boy's mother, who pleads with the family patriarch (Christopher Plummer) to pay the ransom. Plummer is impressive as the ruthless tycoon, and there's strong support from Mark Wahlberg as his adviser. However, the film could have been better if Scott had paid more attention to the truth and not settled for this sedentary version of events. TERRY STAUNTON (US/UK 2017, violence, swearing)

Count Three and Pray ★★★ 12.35-2.40pm Talking Pictures TV

DRAMA Showing ahead of her 94th birthday tomorrow, this film marked the feature debut of Joanne Woodward. She plays a tough-minded orphan gal caught up in the mayhem caused by the arrival of new preacher Van Heflin - a pastor with a past. There's also a noteworthy villain in Raymond Burr, before he became known as TV's Perry Mason and Ironside. TONY SLOMAN (US 1955)

McLintock! ★★★ 1.00-3.45pm Great Action

COMEDY This rollicking John Wayne western is a real family affair: it co-stars one son, Patrick, while another, Michael, produced the movie. It's basically a rewrite of The Taming of the Shrew, with all the pre-feminist attitudes endemic to that Shakespeare comedy - attitudes, one suspects, held by the Duke himself. It's rowdy, rude and rather dated. Tos (US 1963)

WESTERN This solid if familiar genre offering sees a weary gunslinger (Kiefer Sutherland) attempting to reconnect with his estranged dad (Kiefer's own father. Donald). At the same time, a ruthless land baron (Brian Cox) is taking control of the town. Even if the story unfolds exactly as expected, film fans will relish seeing Donald and

Kiefer sharing the screen together. STEPHEN CARTY (Can/Fr/US 2015, violence, swearing) B

DOCUMENTARY New Model Agency

10.00pm C4 Catch up via C4 streaming

A pacey and punchy ob-doc trails the burgeoning careers of models working for an inclusive agency. Sheffield-based Zebedee prides itself on championing those with a unique or alternative look, with new faces eager to get in magazines and on billboards, and existing signings jostling for bookings.

It might be less of a deep dive and more a surface skim, but it's a bouncy ride meeting the likes of Jasroop, who might be the most confident 21-year-old you'll ever encounter. She's landed a fashion shoot in Venice, though when she arrives at the location – a run-down sports hall - it's not exactly bursting with the glamour she expected. The same can be said for the baggy grey athleisure shorts she's asked (and then refuses) to wear in the photos.

There are fewer histrionics at Zebedee's open casting day, when a shout out for potential new models results in hundreds of applications. Many of the hopefuls who walk through the door have emotional and powerful stories to tell through the photographer's lens.

The Hairy Bikers Go West

7.00pm (not Wales) BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer

It's always a surprise seeing what Si King and Dave Myers are inspired to make following their foodie explorations. In their trip to Merseyside and the Wirral they visit a pig farm ("Ooh the first thing we ever cooked together was a Gloucestershire Old Spot roast," Dave recalls nostalgically), a 57-year-old Chinese restaurant and a chippy, so - obviously - they make "an egg foo yung carry-out with salt and pepper chips, Biker-style".

What blows them away, though, is a hydroponic farm ("It's like Willy Wonka's chocolate factory – with lettuce"), which gives them hope for the future of food production.

Despite the stated episode titles, QI rarely sticks too close to the topic at hand. Sure, you might start out with a question fairly close to the theme "united" or "UFOlogy" – to use two recent examples - but it's never long before Sandi Toksvig takes her comedic charges down some odd factual byways and tangents, to the point where the queries bear little relation to where the journey started.

Of course, it's all so fascinating you're unlikely to care - but it feels oddly satisfying that this week's quiz officially tackles "Unrelated U topics", finally ditching the flimsy pretext. Tom Allen, Lou Sanders and Chris McCausland join Toksvig and Alan Davies in hunting the disconnected nuggets of trivia. HUW FULLERTON

REALITY

The Jury: Murder Trial

9.00pm C4

Catch up via C4 streaming

The two juries in this re-enactment of a real murder trial now hear about the victim, "Helen". She's painted as unstable, mercurial and manipulative, but one of the jurors is especially upset about how she's portrayed and reveals an incident in her past that makes her more sympathetic to Helen's mental health issues. Another juror relates to the accused because he was once in an equally tense relationship.

There's no question that "John" killed his wife, but the juries have got to decide whether it was a calculated act or whether he just snapped. They seem to be moving towards one verdict, but there are still two episodes to go. JR

HISTORY

The Boleyns: a Scandalous Family

9.00pm BBC4

Catch up via iPlayer

One of the great, tragic tales of Tudor intrigue – the rise and fall of Thomas, Mary and Anne Boleyn – gets a good going-over here, in a programme first shown in 2021. It is the kind of history series that lines up engaging experts to tell the story but for visual padding has to rely on actors in costumes wafting about in Tudor interiors with no dialogue. So they frown at parchment letters or hover on stone staircases and swap meaningful looks.

That can feel toshy, but classy production values and elegant graphics help the series explain the slippery ladders of court life that Anne Boleyn's social-climbing father exploited brilliantly - up to a point.

9.00pm Channel 5 Catch up via My5 It's an atmospheric welcome to Chile for Ben; he's greeted by a tapestry of forests shrouded in soupy mist – and immediately his hosts set the dogs on him. And he soon discovers there's a wider gamut of furry creatures on site, ranging from bunnies to toilet-invading tarantulas.

Yorkshireman Scott and his Chilean partner Scarlet appear happy and relaxed in their lovely home, which took Scott just six months to build. But, as usual, Ben quickly unearths the backdrop of suffering that led Scott, in particular, to make a break for the wilderness. GARY ROSE

Tonight, the dread of their arrival hangs in the air, with Jaheim growing uncertain whether the risk of being kicked out - or worse - is worth it.

There is also a mischievous storyline involving Leah (Jodie Campbell) defacing a painting. Rather than getting her in trouble, however, it sentences the five to a worse fate: becoming the shiny new project of Preeya (Nimisha Odedra) and Chelsea (Sarah Daykin). STEPHEN KELLY

Surely it can only be a matter of time before the rest of the Kinsella family turn against the vicious, amoral Bren? There are other, possibly more important, issues for the Dublin gang to address: the Garda arrest one of them for conspiracy to murder and there's an attempt on Eric's life. Even so, I'm more concerned about Bren. His behaviour around his granddaughter is creepy. JR

FILM REVIEWS

FILM OF THE DAY

The World's End ★★★ 9.00-11.15pm ITV4

COMEDY After mining horrors in Shaun of the Dead and action movies in Hot Fuzz, director Edgar Wright plunders the sci-fi genre for the final part of his Cornetto trilogy. Simon Pegg, Nick Frost, Martin Freeman, Eddie Marsan and Paddy Considine play former friends who reconvene to complete an epic pub crawl from their school days, only for the evening to descend into barmaggedon. The five boozers are engaging company, while the indie soundtrack, zany violence and visual effects add to a self-aware romp that slips down a treat. ALAN JONES (UK 2013, violence, swearing, HD)

White Cradle Inn ★★★ 2.20-4.00pm

Talking Pictures TV

DRAMA This touching wartime tale centres on the bond that develops between Swiss innkeeper Madeleine Carroll and French refugee Michael McKeag, as well as the friction between him and Carroll's womanising husband, Michael Rennie. Harold French's film builds to a dénouement that is both authentic and tense. DAVID PARKINSON (UK 1947, BW)

September Gun ★★★ 3.00-5.00pm Legend

WESTERN Robert Preston brings a welcome grizzled edge to this comedy western. He plays the gunslinger well past his draw-by date who helps a nun trying to reclaim a church that has been occupied by outlaws. The byplay between Preston and Patty Duke is decidedly spicy, while Christopher Lloyd also appears as a baddie. DP (US TVM 1983, some violence)

Radio Days ★★★ ★ 4.00-5.45pm

Talking Pictures TV

COMEDY This underrated entry in Woody Allen's canon is a delightful examination of childhood and the process of memory. Evoking Allen's own formative years, the story cuts from a family home in Brooklyn to the glamour of Radioland. Mia Farrow heads a splendid cast, which includes a 13-year-old Seth Green as Allen's young alter ego. DP (US 1987, may be edited for content)

Transformers: Dark of the Moon ***

5.55-9.00pm Film4

ADVENTURE The second Transformers sequel raises the action bar to awesome new levels. The story recounts how the 1960s space race was, in fact, initiated in response to an alien vessel landing on the Moon – part of a Decepticon plan to enslave humankind. It's left to Shia LaBeouf and the Autobots to save the world (again). AJ (US 2011, edited for content, HD)

The Departed ★★★★ 9.00pm-12 midnight Film4

CRIME Martin Scorsese won the best director Oscar for this Boston-set crime saga. Cop Leonardo DiCaprio goes under cover to help catch Mob boss Jack Nicholson, who in turn has groomed Matt Damon to be his spy on the force. Nicholson stands out among the luminous leads. LESLIE FELPERIN (US 2006, violence, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, drug abuse, HD)

THRILLER Jennifer Jason Leigh makes Bridget Fonda's life a misery in this ludicrous but enjoyable thriller. Chic Manhattanite Fonda thinks frumpy Leigh is the "perfect" lodger, until she starts dressing like Fonda and tries to steal her boyfriend. You might guess how it all ends, but it's still enthralling stuff. JOANNA BERRY (US 1992, violence, swearing. sex scenes, nudity)

HORROR Director Antonia Bird's stunning mix of gore and Carry On-style banter is a film you'll either love or hate. Inspired by the tragic Donner Pass disaster of 1846-7, the film stars Robert Carlyle as a starved cannibal who sets about devouring the inhabitants of a mountain outpost. Guy Pearce is brilliant as the army captain attempting to stop him. AJ (US/UK 1999, violence, swearing)

Loving ★★★★
11.15pm-1.10am BBC2

ROMANCE Joel Edgerton and Ruth Negga star in the compelling true story of Richard and Mildred Loving. In a bid to swerve Virginia's anti-miscegenation laws, the interracial couple marry in Washington DC in 1958, only to be told their marriage certificate is invalid back home. The film offers a moving tribute to the pair's courage. AJ (US/UK 2016, swearing, HD)

REALITY

Bring the Drama

9.00pm BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer So far, the group has presented a united front, but suddenly it's getting a bit aggro. Look no further than the normally mild-mannered Janice, who says that she's "looking forward to slapping someone in the face".

But the star search hasn't devolved into mayhem – it's merely action week and the actors are learning stage fighting as they prep a scene from Peaky Blinders. Their choreography is, it must be said, impressive, and some are clearly relishing the chance to show off both their physicality and how stylish they look in a baker boy cap. But others need to realise that a glower can say just as much as a well-aimed gut punch. DAVID BROWN

The Jury: Murder Trial

9pm C4 Catch up via C4 streaming So far in this re-enactment of a real murder trial, the evidence has portrayed the accused as a nice guy who had a "moment", leading him to bludgeon his wife to death with a hammer. However, now it's the turn of the prosecution to question him. Unfortunately, most of his answers are a tearful "I don't remember."

It's riveting if you are drawing conclusions from home, but even more fascinating is observing the private conversations of the two individual juries. From these it's becoming increasingly obvious how much the life experiences of each juror affect their judgement in a court case. Concludes tomorrow at 9pm.

DRAMA Domino Day

9.00pm, 9.45pm BBC3 Full series available on iPlayer How does a hero cope without their special powers? It's a question that's been asked time and again, in films such as Superman II, on TV shows like Buffy the Vampire Slaver and in ancient mythology, most notably when Circe gave up her immortality. Here, Domino (Siena Kelly) has now had her witch skills "severed" and is trying to adjust to life as an ordinary human. What she doesn't realise, of course, is that Esme and Silas are out there plotting to kill her. Will Domino end up trying to restore her gifts, like so many of those brought down to normal in pop culture before her? Events in the penultimate episode provide the answer, while raising the stakes for the finale at 9.45pm. DB

But while Eliza has a distraction, and the chance to atone, with a profitable investigation for Nash & Sons, William has nothing but time on his hands... time that enables him to dwell on things, and for realisations to be made. It's a lovely, overdue treat for fans, packed with sweet two-handers, deft social commentary and beautiful calligraphy. MB from 10pm BBC4 Catch up: iPlayer Claire Bloom, still radiant at 93, introduces a rare screening of this dramatisation of Tolstoy's tragic romance. A Rudolph Cartier production, it first aired in 1961 and was the prestigious highlight of a week of celebrations for BBC Television's 25th anniversary. Its selling point 63 years later is that it captured two stars in their prime.

As Russian aristocrat Anna, Bloom was already an established figure (in 1952, she'd co-starred with Chaplin in Limelight), while playing her lover Vronsky, and on the cusp of global stardom, was Sean Connery. Heaving with barely bottled virility, he was mere weeks away from filming Dr No. PATRICK MULKERN

DRAMA Alice & Jack

10.00pm C4

Full series via C4 streaming
Not dissimilar to the character of Alice (Andrea Riseborough), this will they/won't they, decade-spanning drama has been intriguing, confusing, irritating and impossible to walk away from. Despite it driving me up the wall, I've felt compelled to keep coming back for more.

If you have also lasted this long, the final two episodes (the concluding part is tomorrow at 10pm) deliver nuance, emotion and depth. Although this penultimate episode begins with a bizarre scene involving artificial insemination that makes you shout, "What?!" at the TV, while Thursday's finale spools back to 2007 and has Jack (Domhnall Gleeson) talking about "swiping right", despite Tinder not launching for another five years.

So much about this has been frustrating, but I have (masochistically, if nothing else) enjoyed such a wild ride. FRANCES TAYLOR

FILM REVIEWS

The Father * 9.00-11.00pm Film4 12

DRAMA Adapting his acclaimed play, Florian Zeller makes a breathtaking directorial debut with this perceptive look at dementia and the toll it takes on those close to the afflicted. Anthony Hopkins is the proud, elderly man suffering increasing confusion, while Olivia Colman is the daughter trying to balance love and care with her own life needs. Zeller's masterstroke is in conveying the experience of a disintegrating mind through distorted realities and dramatic shifts in perspective, and Hopkins won an Oscar for his devastating performance. Showing in a Hopkins double bill with Legends of the Fall. ALAN JONES (UK/Fr 2020, violence, swearing, HD)

Where No Vultures Fly

★★★ 11.00am-1.10pm

Talking Pictures TV

ADVENTURE This splendid film was shot on location in Africa and has an ecological message that's still relevant today. Anthony Steel stars as a game warden on the lookout for ivory hunters in the shadow of Mount Kilimanjaro, with Harold Warrender among the villains. The suspense is well maintained, and the film spawned an equally popular sequel, West of Zanzibar.

Rio Grande

12.35-2.50pm Film4

WESTERN Following on from Fort Apache and She Wore a Yellow Ribbon, this stirring movie was the final film in John Ford's cavalry trilogy and tells the story of a daring response to Native American raids from across the border. In the first of their four pairings on screen, John Wayne and Maureen O'Hara star as a fort commander and his long-separated wife.

Henry VIII and His Six Wives ★★★

2.50-5.10pm Film4

DRAMA The costumes and locations for this film version of the 1970 BBC TV series

The Six Wives of Henry VIII are superb, although the story suffers from being compressed into just over two hours. Keith Michell gives a textbook portrayal of Henry, but he is outshone by Bernard Hepton as Cranmer and Donald Pleasence as a wonderfully devious Cromwell. DAVID PARKINSON (UK 1972, HD)

One Foot in Hell ★★★ 3.05-4.55pm

Talking Pictures TV

WESTERN New to Talking Pictures TV this week, this movie gives the standard western formula a novel twist. Alan Ladd plays the world-weary Civil War soldier who plots a diabolical revenge on the town that he blames for his wife's death. The intriguing story sees Ladd recruit a quartet of outcasts to help him carry out his mission. ADRIAN TURNER (IJS 1960, violence)

Smokescreen ★★★ 5.30-7.00pm

Talking Pictures TV

THRILLER This aboveaverage 1960s programme filler stars Peter Vaughan (who would go on to play Grouty in TV's Porridge) as a dogged, penny-pinching insuranceclaims inspector who suspects there is more to a blazing car wreck than meets the eye. Director Jim O'Connolly keeps the action moving swiftly along. DP (UK 1964, BW)

My Best Friend's Wedding ★★★★

6.55-9.00pm Film4

ROMCOM Julia Roberts stars here as a writer who discovers her best pal and former lover (Dermot Mulroney) is getting married, so sets out to sabotage the wedding in order to win him for herself. Cameron Diaz (as the bride-to-be) and Rupert Everett (as Roberts's accomplice) give sparkling comedic support. JOANNA BERRY (US 1997, edited for content, HD)

The Blair Witch Project ★★★★ 9.00-11.00pm Sky Sci-Fi

CHILLER Produced on a shoestring, this no-frills horror became a box-office sensation. The story follows three students who go into the woods to film their hunt for a mythical monster. The film's rough, video-diary edge and shaky point-of-view camerawork take the viewer right into the unfolding story. ANDREW COLLINS (US 1999, violence, swearing, co/JBW, HD)

Tango & Cash ★★★ 11.00pm-1.05am 5 Action 13

ACTION Sylvester Stallone and Kurt Russell headline this hugely silly, hugely enjoyable buddy caper. The twist is that Russell is the no-brain thug, while Stallone is the sophisticated one. The plot sees the bickering duo pair up after they are framed by evil drugs baron Jack Palance. JOHN FERGUSON (US 1989, violence, swearing, sex scenes, drug abuse, nudity, HD)

Monty Don's Spanish Gardens

8.00pm BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer From an elegant garden in Puerto Pollensa, Majorca, to working allotments outside Marbella via numerous Islamic-inspired green spaces and inspirational climate-led planting all along Spain's southern coast, Monty Don visits an incredible variety of gardens. It's a visual feast, and also a history lesson.

What I found most interesting is seeing how the council at Estepona have restored this seaside town's charm. No longer car-dominated chaos, it's been greened up with a stunning promenade, tranquil communal squares, 16,000 potted plants and an adopt-a-tree scheme. It's as impressive as any formal Andalusian garden. JANE RACKHAM See feature: page 22

Darby and Joan

8.00pm Drama Catch up via UKTV Play

In your typical crime drama, discovering the truth is the key preoccupation: the perpetrator is punished and the credits roll. But what this finale offers us is something more emotionally complex. So, yes, Joan does get to uncover what went on in the past of her late husband lan, but caught up in those revelations are life lessons about healing and reconciliation.

There are moments, too, when this last hour becomes a paean to seizing the moment – fearing that women of her age are perceived as having outlived their usefulness, Joan decides to take on a parachute jump. A metaphor, if ever there was one, for spreading your wings. DAVID BROWN

The Apprentice

9.00pm BBC1

Catch up via iPlayer

Maybe it says something about this series of The Apprentice that I've noticed this, but Lord Sugar's receptionist (the person he asks to "send the candidates in, please") has had the exact same bar chart up on her desktop for the past four weeks.

It's fitting, really, as this is the sort of attention to detail that's lacking in tonight's task. The teams are asked to sell (hypothetical) sponsorship ads on a (hypothetical) Formula E car. Deals are made in made-up millions, and while one logo they create is bad, the other team's is even worse.

Here's an idea: perhaps next week's task could be to design a new graphic for the receptionist's computer screen?

The Jury: Murder Trial

9.00pm C4 Catch up: C4 streaming

The two juries, who are still unaware of each other's existence, are now deliberating whether

"John" is guilty of murder or manslaughter in this re-enactment of a real trial. Quite rightly, they take it very seriously.

Deliberations in the jury room are always private, so this gives a remarkable insight into the pressures involved and the workings (and, by default, flaws) of our justice system. By the second day both juries are a long way from a unanimous verdict.

While one could argue that these participants have been deliberately chosen for their differing views and experiences, it's been a gripping experiment – and the conclusion is dramatic. JR

The Mighty Mississippi with Nick Knowles

9.00pm Channel 5 Catch up via My5

Nick Knowles's trip down the 2,340-mile-long river known as the backbone of America is a very physical one. No lazing aboard a paddle steamer enjoying the view for him. While in Minneapolis he flies over the "Big Muddy" in a helicopter, rides a Harley-Davidson along its banks, attempts to water-ski on it (it's the birthplace of the sport) – and promptly falls in.

When he reaches St Louis, he's invited to pitch a ceremonial baseball in front of the huge crowd at a Cardinals match. They're all just relieved he doesn't hit someone. His last leg is to New Orleans in tomorrow's concluding episode. JR kookiness and unique voice to this dark sitcom.

hope, she depends on her parents for everything.

Murdoch Mysteries

You'll often find series regulars in whodunnits suddenly acquiring a hobby purely to service the plot of the week, and there's a prime example here when the oftenunderused Miss Hart is shown to have a keen interest in thoroughbreds.
So, what are the odds of there being a racehorse-related mystery to solve following this revelation? Obviously, it's a dead cert – and sure enough,
a champion equine by the name of Baccarat is soon found in his stall with a broken neck.

Murdoch, meanwhile, comes up with a gadget he believes will solve the crime: it's a motion perception camera, a handy piece of tech that means the detective has essentially invented the photo finish. DB

Following three days of police interviews, British Airways pilot Robert Brown decides to make a confession and leads detectives to the remote spot in Windsor Great Park where his wife Joanna was buried. She had been brutally bludgeoned to death on Halloween while her children listened in their playroom. But Brown denied murder with a defence of adjustment disorder due to diminished responsibility. Now, 13 years on, he has served half of his sentence and is due to be released. Can a campaign by Joanna's family ensure he stays behind bars? FILM REVIEWS

SPY The thrilling sixth episode in the action franchise finds Ethan Hunt (Tom Cruise) posing as a terrorist to buy plutonium before rogue agent Solomon Lane (Sean Harris) can enact his doomsday scenario. The densely plotted narrative interconnects with past story threads as events speed towards the nuclear-countdown climax. But what audiences really want to see is Cruise's sensational stunt work – and he doesn't disappoint, with a London rooftop chase, a motorbike pursuit through Paris and a helicopter battle over mountain terrain. ALAN JONES (US 2018, violence, swearing, HD)

The Bridge at Remagen ★★★

1.30-4.00pm 5 Action

WAR George Segal lifts this "war is hell" saga out of the ordinary with his world-weary turn as a platoon leader trying to reach a German bridge before the enemy can destroy it. Director John Guillermin attempts to invest a measure of cynical disenchantment into the standard heroics, but epic explosions and flashy camerawork ultimately win out. AJ (US 1969, edited for content, HD)

The Pickwick Papers ★★★ 1.35-3.40pm Talking Pictures TV

COMEDY Charles Dickens's sprawling novel is reined in here by writer/director Noel Langley, but without sacrificing too much of its jaunty nature. Brimming with memorable characters, the story sees members of the Pickwick Club embarking on various adventures. Among the cast, James Hayter, Nigel Patrick and Kathleen Harrison are excellent.

War of the Wildcats ★★ 2.55-5.10pm Great Action □

WESTERN John Wayne drills for oil and attempts to win the hand of Martha Scott from rival oilman Albert Dekker in this efficient if dated western. Political matters enter the fray when Wayne turns socialist and starts fighting for the rights of the Native Americans who own the land.

Strategic Air Command ★★★

U

4.30-6.45pm Film4

DRAMA This blend of melodrama and high-flying flag-waver stars James Stewart as a baseball player who turns bomber pilot. Director Anthony Mann is clearly more comfortable with the scenes of Stewart bonding with his fellow pilots than he is handling the domestic stuff, but it's to June Allyson's credit that she still makes an impact as Stewart's wife. DP (US 1955, HD)

It's Great to Be Young ★★★★ 5.25-7.15pm Talking Pictures TV

MUSICAL Cyril Frankel's light-hearted comedy has a wonderful pace and energy to it. John Mills stars as a trumpet-playing, jazz-loving teacher whose enforced resignation leads to a (minor) revolution at his school. The kids, led by Dorothy Bromiley and Jeremy Spenser, are charming, and thanks to Ted Willis's fine screenplay, the adults are utterly believable, too. TONY SLOMAN (UK 1956)

DRAMA Father Brown

1.45pm BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer It's not often that you find someone wielding a deadly weapon in plain view, but then Kembleford has never before played host to a vampire hunter, who has come equipped with a variety of antique wooden stakes. Silas O'Hagan, for such is his name, is straight out of the Bram Stoker playbook and spends much of the episode wafting around in a cloak, hunting a supposed blood sucker.

Yet while the requisite corpse does indeed have bite marks to the carotid artery, Father Brown believes this macabre touch at the crime scene is mere set dressing. He has a tough job persuading the villagers not to raid the church for its supplies of holy water. DAVID BROWN

PANEL SHOW Would I Lie to You?

9.00pm (not Wales) BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer Did Alex Jones once spend the night on The One Show sofa? Does The Traitors' Wilfred Webster have a four-letter tattoo in an unusual place? And did Mo Gilligan have a first dance - with the bride - at someone else's wedding? All these tall tales and more are on trial in this special "unseen bits" episode, pulling deleted lies from across this 17th series. On any other panel show this kind of clip compilation could seem disjointed, but the beauty of WILTY? is that the dissection of every potential fib feels like a whole game in itself. So it's just as entertaining as any regular instalment. HUW FULLERTON from 9pm BBC4 Catch up: iPlayer Has any other band or artist enjoyed more themed nights on BBC4 than Queen? Not that I'm complaining – as the band's fans will no doubt agree, it's always a pleasure, dipping into this particular archive.

MUSIC Queen Night

Tonight's celebration begins with *Queen: the Legendary 1975*Concert at 9pm, a vital document of a band on the verge of all-conquering superstardom. That's followed at 10.05pm (repeated at 1.00am) by the documentary Freddie Mercury: a Life in Ten Pictures, an inevitable repeat of the hit-packed Queen at the BBC (11.05pm), and The Story of Bohemian Rhapsody (12.05am), in which Brian May and Roger Taylor reflect upon their defining opus. The Mighty Mississippi with Nick Knowles

Let's be honest, Nick Knowles is no Elvis Presley. He gives it his best shot though, singing and playing guitar in the legendary Sun Studio, Memphis, where the King recorded, and then, in Lansky Bros, trying on the same style of jacket that Elvis wore for his wedding.

There are serious moments among the light-hearted ones (walking five ducks through the Peabody Hotel's lobby is the weirdest). In Jackson, Knowles learns about the civil rights protests of the 60s, while in New Orleans, he drives over the phenomenal Lake Borgne Surge Barrier, built after the devastation of Hurricane Katrina. Martin Compston's Norwegian Fling

10pm BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer Lea two of the Line of Duty star's trip around Norway, in the company of pal Phil MacHugh, still carries the tang of missed opportunity: how Norway ended up in a union with Sweden, having achieved independence from Denmark, is tackled with a quick "Sounds complicated!". But their enjoyment is as infectious as their respect for their host country is admirable. They head for the coast and countryside tonight, trying out fishing and logging, but the most intriguing section comes during Norway's National Day parade in Bergen, an eye-popping panoply of classic cars, pipe-playing Scots and much more besides. Greg Davies: the Back of Mv Mum's Head

Catch up via C4 streaming

He gets a lot of juvenile mileage talking about people who are "not normal" - such as his brother-in-law after his inappropriate response to childbirth, and children with a fetish for flip flops. He also covers involuntary bodily noises and efforts to stay relevant to teens. JR

The comic starts his stage show first shown in 2015 - ranting about middle age. His body, he tells us, looks like it's been carved by a four-yearold out of a block of budget ham... pink and jellified. Nice. But he mainly focuses on the things his mother dismisses because, "It's not normal, love". The comma in that phrase is essential, by the way.

FILM OF THE DAY

The Impossible $\star\star\star\star$

11.05pm (not Wales) BBC2 A stressful but rewarding watch, this disaster movie follows a holidaying family violently separated by the 2004 tsunami in Thailand. Naomi Watts and Ewan McGregor play the parents, with a pre-Spider-Man Tom Holland as their eldest child. (2011)

SITCOM Here We Go

8.30pm BBC1 Full series via iPlayer

Button House may be long gone, but there's a thoroughly enjoyable reunion this evening for Ghosts' Pat Butcher and Julian Fawcett MP. For fans missing the series, it's a treat to have Jim Howick and Simon Farnaby under the same roof once more.

Rachel (Katherine Parkinson) is fussing ahead of the arrival of prim sister Penny (Dolly Wells) and her husband Boyd (Farnaby, who has BMW-bore-slash-overall-pompousgit down to a There). "Try to pretend we're all happy and doing well," is Rachel's instruction to the family as she opens the door to her snobbish relatives.

Husband Paul (Howick) makes it his mission to get Boyd to take even a passing interest in any of them, which proves to be a lot trickier (and more expensive) than he bargained for. Farcical, and endearingly amusing. FT

DAY

The Impossible ★★★★

11.05pm-12.45am BBC2 (not Wales)

DRAMA This visceral and deeply moving true story follows the efforts of a family to survive the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami. Naomi Watts and Ewan McGregor give raw performances as a married couple who, along with their three boys, are caught up in the devastation in Thailand. The depiction of events is thoroughly terrifying, but director JA Bayona doesn't rely on special effects alone. The scenes of the eldest son (a young Tom Holland) helping survivors to find loved ones are well handled, and the film overall packs a genuine emotional wallop. ALAN JONES (Sp 2011, brief nudity, HD)

1.00-2.50pm Legend

FILM NOIR In director Rudolph Maté's smartly plotted movie, Edmond O'Brien gets to hunt for his own murderer as he races around San Francisco trying to discover who has swapped his drink for a poisoned one. Moodily shot by Ernest Laszlo and with a cracking score by Dimitri Tiomkin. it stands up well to the 1988 Dennis Quaid remake. DAVID PARKINSON (US 1949, BW)

Roman Holiday 4.30-6.50pm Film4

ROMCOM This sublime film rightly secured a best actress Oscar for Audrey Hepburn for her role as the princess who falls for a reporter (Gregory Peck) during an official visit to the Eternal City. It's immaculately directed by William Wyler from a script written by (the uncredited) Dalton Trumbo, and is played with style and grace. TONY SLOMAN (US 1953, BW, HD)

Suffragette ★★★★ 6.50-9.00pm Film4

DRAMA Portraying the fight for the female vote in the early 20th century, this film centres on a group of largely fictional women, including laundry workers Carey Mulligan and Anne-Marie Duff and protest leader Helena Bonham Carter. Eschewing the usual trappings of period drama, this is a rousing introduction to an important chapter of social and political history. EMMA SIMMONDS (UK/Fr 2015, edited for content, HD)

The Commuter $\star\star\star$ 9.00-11.10pm 5 Star

THRILLER Liam Neeson becomes embroiled in a race against time to find a fellow train passenger of interest to a criminal in this workmanlike action movie. It may not be as tense as Neeson's earlier collaborations with director Jaume Collet-Serra (Unknown, Non-Stop etc), but features a fine femme fatale in Vera Farmiga. TERRY STAUNTON (Fr/UK/US 2018, violence, swearing, HD)

The Fly ★★★ 9.05-10.55pm Talking Pictures TV

1950s sci-fi is new to Talking Pictures TV tonight. David Hedison (credited here as Al Hedison) plays the scientist whose matter-transmitter experiments result in him having the head and arm of a fly. Meanwhile, his brother, Vincent Price, has histrionics about family curses. Plot inconsistencies aside, this is an enjoyably unsettling flesh-crawler. AJ (US 1958)

HORROR This slick slice of

The Miseducation of Cameron Post ★★★★

10.15-11.40pm BBC3

DRAMA Chloë Grace Moretz is the enigmatic, understated centre of this deeply affecting coming-of-age tale. Caught in a tryst with a female friend, Moretz is sent to a correctional Christian camp run by a pious and pitiless Jennifer Ehle. Scripted with wit and insight, the film swings deftly from absurdity to tragedy. ES (US 2018, swearing, discriminatory language, sex scenes, drug abuse, HD)

The news has sent shockwaves throughout the audio industry. There were senior insiders at the BBC who knew nothing about a plan that could have seismic repercussions for both themselves and those working in the commercial sector. And the commercial sector's reaction has been one of alarm and dismay.

We're talking about the announcement earlier this month of a BBC proposal to create four new DAB+ music stations, an expansion that would be the biggest of its kind from the BBC since a slew of new services hit the airwaves in the early 2000s - Radio 4 Extra, 6 Music, Radio 1Xtra and the Asian Network, all of them additions to the 5 Live station that had come into existence the previous decade.

News of the add-on stations to Radios 1, 2 and 3 - their names not yet known and which are likely to launch in 2025 at the earliest - arrives at a time when radio is already in the midst of a revolution. BBC Sounds is providing on-demand content on a scale unimaginable a generation ago. Over the same time period, podcasting has grown into a global industry worth tens of billions, comprising an ever-changing menu of thousands of titles.

Factor in Spotify, YouTube, Apple and other music streaming services and the listening battleground has never been so fiercely fought over. What BBC radio now wants to do ramps things up to a level that, in their own eyes, represents a further and thrilling enrichment of the listening experience, but in others' represents a threat to livelihoods and a grave diminution of what non-BBC radio can offer.

Is the BBC using its licence-fee-funded might to bully commercial rivals into submission? Or are the new services not only justified, but fulfilling the BBC's remit to serve the entire nation? The question is worthy of The Moral Maze itself.

O WHAT EXACTLY are the new stations going to do? The idea looks enticing: "To delve deeper into specific genres and periods of music with context, curation and storytelling done in a way only the BBC can do," according to the announcement. Listeners "will get a deeper listening experience than what's available elsewhere, hear brilliant storytelling through our extensive archive and discover more music to love, whatever their mood," says Lorna

All of which sounds very public-spirited, but there is a backdrop to this development, unspoken by the BBC, which is key: BBC music radio is losing listeners to commercial stations in big numbers and needing to claw

Clarke, the BBC director of music.

The departure of Ken Bruce from Radio 2 to Greatest Hits Radio last year encapsulated the way the tide has been turning. In a matter of months, the 2.2 million listenership that the Bruce slot commanded when he arrived at Greatest Hits had shot up to 3.8 million. According to the same January listening figures, Vernon Kay -

now broadcasts on

Boom Radio; while Ken

Bruce continues on Greatest Hits Radio

Bruce's successor in the Radio 2 mid-morning weekday slot has 1.5 million fewer listeners than his predecessor.

BBC radio - once the hugely dominant player in the market - now only accounts for 43 per cent of all time spent listening to the radio, while commercial stations account for 55 per cent of listening hours. From the BBC's point of view, something has to be done.

"It's definitely a way of fighting decline," one senior BBC radio figure says. "It's parking tanks on commercial radio's lawn. But then again there is truth in talking about difference and offering more choice, more niche services and a focused attempt to reach a particular part of the audience with particular tastes."

The Radio 2 extension will offer what the BBC is calling "a distinctive take on pop nostalgia", but how different will it be from stations like Greatest Hits (owned by Bauer), Heart (Global) and the independent Boom Radio? Radio 2's move to try to embrace a younger audience has been a gift to those stations, but they believe they will be affected once a Radio 2 extension starts going down a similar road with a menu of pop favourites from the 50s to the 70s.

Boom Radio - with presenters such as 70s-era stalwarts David Hamilton and Graham Dene has tripled its audience since it was founded three years ago, with around three quarters of a million weekly listeners, and has itself just launched a new spin-off, Boom Rock. "We are puzzled by this potential move by the BBC," says Phil Riley, co-founder of Boom Radio. "Given the recent trend, which has seen BBC Radio 2 losing older listeners in their thousands, it smacks somewhat of panic."

'Seven million of Radio 2's listeners are over 55'

At Radiocentre - the industry body for commercial radio - the concern is marked. "This strikes at the heart of what our members are," a senior Radiocentre figure says.

Responding to Riley's concerns, Lorna Clarke told Radio 4's The Media Show: "There's room for everyone, and what we do will be completely different." As an example of the wealth of material available in the BBC archive, she cited Elton John, a performer whose work has been recorded by the BBC going back 50 years. She denied that Radio 2 was going after Boom Radio's audience. "Seven million of Radio 2's listeners are over 55."

THE QUESTION OF where the money will come from to fund the new stations has added piquancy given the cuts to local radio that the BBC has made over the past year or so. One BBC insider expects a lot of automation - in other words the content on the new stations will be largely pre-recorded, which is much less expensive than broadcasting live.

Within a week of the announcement of the new stations came the news of the death of longtime Radio 2 presenter Steve Wright. His Sunday Love Songs programme was due to be one of those simulcast on the Radio 2 extension - an instance of more "traditional" Radio 2 broadcasting, which the new station will sadly no longer have available to it.

The plans are subject to the relevant regulatory approvals and ultimately it will be for Ofcom to decide if the proposed changes can go ahead. Something watered down cannot be ruled out. But whatever happens, one thing is clear: the BBC is in a fight for its future and it's coming out swinging. SIMON O'HAGAN

They are considered "the Marines of meditation" because of the punishing Vipassana method those who sign up are put through. Chart Music: the Top of the Pops Podcast

If the definition of a podcast is endless, random yakking, then this fits the bill. The premise sees ex-Melody Maker writers Sarah Bee and Simon Price break down an episode of the BBC's old flagship show Top of the Pops, alongside the no-holds-barred host Al Needham. It's all very rock 'n' roll, filled with muso war stories (hanging out with metal band Therapy? in the desert), swearing and more swearing. There isn't much (or any!) music, but a fun nostalgia blast all the same. JAMES MOTTRAM

Fast-food joints are the places to find fame online

IN THE STREAMING world the road to a kind of fame and fortune runs through the chicken shop. Taking somebody to one is the definition of a cheap date.

Nine years ago, one Elijah Quashie, at the time a 23-year-old from north London, began visiting some of the thousands of said establishments in every urban neighbourhood, sharing his impressions on a YouTube channel called The Pengest Munch. Sensing that this might give him what in the trade is known as First Mover Advantage, he boldly styled himself the Chicken Connoisseur. Almost a decade later he continues to submit the carbonised poultry of the capital to his taste test.

But even the world of chicken shops does not stand still. Google the words Chicken Shop Date and you'll see that comedian Amelia Dimoldenberg has marked herself out a nice little corner of the celebrity-industrial complex via her chicken-shop encounters with celebrities over a few nuggets and a carbonated beverage. Think Comedians in Cars Getting Coffee without the gloss and that's a start.

OMETIMES THE GUEST will be a grime star you've never heard of, at other times a hunk like Paul Mescal and occasionally, as the PRs get more savvy, a superstar like Cher. They film for 40 minutes and cut it down to under ten. In the edit, they invariably cut away to a shot of the proud proprietor smiling over his deep fat fryer.

Amelia doesn't talk to her guests beforehand. She finds that people say the best stuff when it's getting to the end of the chat. She's not looking for any revelations. Questions and answers are short and deadpan. When Cher is asked what is a thing women should do once she says, "Go out with a younger man". What makes it work is that Amelia's not that impressed by any of them. This makes sense. After all, if she was, she wouldn't take them to a chicken shop, would she?

Originally broadcast in 2009 to celebrate 150 years of timetelling by the Palace of Westminster clock and bells, this whistle-stop musical tour of all things Big Ben gets a welcome repeat to mark the 100th anniversary of the first time the bongs went national on BBC airwaves. From the building of the neo-Gothic clock tower following a fire in 1834 via bells that kept cracking to a threat of tilt from 1994 Tube works. Adam Long (co-founder of the Reduced Shakespeare Company) delivers a fun, tuneful and "so not boring" celebration of the cultural symbol. Bitesize factoids abound, but quickfire quips and wry lyrics that can rhyme "critic" with "mad and syphilitic" (about one henpecked designer) or include the invention of "a double three-leaged gravity escapement mechanism" are a cause for much amusement, too. Stuart Mitchell's Cost of Living

7.15pm Radio 4

For many of us south of the border this may be our introduction to the extremely popular Glasgow comedian Stuart Mitchell (above). Give him a try. I found his skewed sense of observational humour gently delightful and I giggled all the way through the first episode of his first Radio 4 series. The conceit is that he's a working-class boy constantly struggling with money issues. In reality this is some of his recent stage material broken into bite-size chunks. His account of an expensive lunch in a Gordon Ramsay restaurant is funny enough to make even Ramsay laugh. You heard it hear first: Mitchell will cross over to national TV very soon. To spend a night on a sleeper train actually asleep is somehow to miss out, and what audio producer Phil Smith has done here is to bring us the rich sonic tapestry that makes such a journey so magical. His recording dates from 2017, and if you didn't know where it had taken place, you might not guess. In fact it's Ukraine (somewhere between the cities of Ivano-Frankivsk, Lviv and Odesa), which lends every clank and every snore and every distant tannoy announcement a special poignancy. 2.00 The Early Music Show Hannah French is joined by musicologist Dr John Andrews to explore opera in England, from Purcell up to the arrival of Handel in the early 1710s. Politics and music go very much hand in hand, it seems. This period of English music has often been described as a barren landscape, but as John Andrews himself says, "The idea that English music was dormant between Purcell and Elgar is as ludicrous as our tendency to forget the brilliance of English literature between Shakespeare and Austen.'

11.30 Slow Radio: Sleeper Train

In 2017, audio producer Phil Smith travelled to Ukraine to attend his friend's wedding. There, journeying among the cities of Ivano-Frankivsk, Lviv and Odesa, he fell in love with the soundworld of the sleeper train. Revisiting these recordings, seven years later, this journey offers echoes of a country in calmer times, when such trains were not a means or symbol of desperate escape (as witnessed in the February of 2022) but conduits of restful imagining, Producer Phil Smith

Analysis

8.30pm Radio 4

Post-industrial decline in the north of England continues to challenge Middlesbrough. Once a steel and shipbuilding powerhouse, it remains one of the most deprived towns in England. Presenter David Baker, who grew up there in the 1970s, returns home to ask what can be done to revive its fortunes and finds a stark contrast between regeneration and deprivation. On the one hand, Teesside University has become a hub for technology and video-game development, with opportunities for graduates to stay in the area and prosper. However, on a nearby estate. the Genesis Project is now an essential charity for local people to access low-cost food and clothes to make ends meet. JEREMY ASPINALL

6.30am/11.30am/4.30pm Radio 4 Extra

The work of British crime writer Lester Powell was regularly featured in the 40s and 50s on the BBC Light Programme. His popular private eye Philip Odell (played by Robert Beatty) detected his way through ten series. In this one, Test Room Eight, investigations begin at a pharmaceutical lab where the development of a flu vaccine has the locals up in arms. Odell, with his long-suffering assistant Heather McMara, is drafted in to sniff out foul play. Bravo to whoever suggested giving this museum piece a dust-off. FIONA HUGHES

TODAY'S CHOICES

Young Again 11.00am Radio 4

It's the laugh that gets you. That great booming cackle of Grayson Perry's is so infectious, it's no wonder he's risen to the status of "national treasure". His Turner Prize-winning pottery, lockdown TV shows encouraging the public to create art, and astute surveys of the state of contemporary Britain may also have something to do with it. It's the reflective nature he's displayed in his programmes that makes him a superb guest for Kirsty Young to ask to look back at his earlier years and contemplate what he may have done differently. There was no preview available but expect lots of that laugh and plenty of acute observations. DAVID CRAWFORD

Drama: A Tsar in London

2.15pm Radio 4

"It's a bloody bear!" exclaims host John Evelyn on his first encounter with Peter Romanoff (and an ursine friend) during the young Tsar's visit in 1698. Prodigious in height, appetite and exuberance, and keen to learn shipbuilding in a quest to modernise his inward-looking country, the giant Muscovite still finds time to wreck the diarist's beloved home and garden, start a dalliance with actress Letitia Cross and try out some DIY dentistry. There is much lightness to Mike Walker's gem of a drama, but serious insight, too, as to what made Peter "the Great". JEREMY ASPINALL

Drama: Sappho in Pieces

2.15pm Radio 4 Hattie Naylor will be a familiar name to fans of audio drama, having written over 50 plays for Radios 3 and 4, including the sublime The Diary of Samuel Pepys. Inspired by fragments of the poetry of Sappho and working with classics professor Edith Hall, Naylor has produced an engaging take on the conflict between the public and the personal life of a celebrity. Sappho (played with the right amount of nuance by Thalissa Teixeira) is widely adored and has a high-maintenance diva personality to match, with her adoring woman servant Timas (Rhiannon Neads) on hand to meet her every whim. But she is also the family's main breadwinner, funding some rather questionable lifestyles and choices. When her brother Charaxus decides to marry a "whore" (in Sappho's opinion),

7.30pm Radio 3

Having begun performing her music in alternative spaces like nightclubs and art galleries, 40-something US composer Missy Mazzoli is now being commissioned by mainstream orchestras and opera companies, including the New York Met. The focus of the BBCSO's latest "Total Immersion" event, she once said, "I'm particularly interested in making music that is hard to categorise" - so why even try? Suffice it to say that tonight's concert centres around her 2021 violin concerto Procession, composed during the pandemic, inspired by medieval rituals to ward off the plague. MARK PAPPENHEIM

TODAY'S CHOICES

The Sondheim Archive

8.00pm Radio 4 Extra Stephen Sondheim (1930-2021, above) is typically defined as a "composer and lyricist", with shows such as Follies and Sweeney Todd: the Demon Barber of Fleet Street in his extensive repertoire. But the man himself never saw this disconnect between words and music - he was a dramatist in his mind, who happened to work with both, and his primary driving force was characters. not themes. This is a wellconstructed (albeit rather luvvy) examination of his work, hosted by actor/singer/director Maria Friedman and with excellent use of BBC archive material. And while the assembled guests are all united in their praise for Sondheim, it's the recordings of his voice that really make this programme. ANNA JONES

Ramblings

3.00pm Radio 4

Author Annabel Abbs was plagued with insomnia after three bereavements. She took to walking around the fields behind her home in the pitch black and found she was able to get some much-needed sleep when she returned. As she explains to Clare Balding, this prompted her to find out more about the healing powers of night walking and she met up with Caroline Whiteman who runs guided rambles in the dark, without the use of head torches. Clare joins the women on a looped walk on the South Downs above the Seven Sisters cliffs. It's a glowering night with just a crescent moon. But it's not the darkness that gets to Balding - it's the concept of walking in silence! Having said this, she concedes that there is something magical about finding your way in the dark. ANNA JONES

TODAY'S CHOICES

Goodnight John Boy

8.00pm Radio 4 Extra An unexpected place to find left-leaning writer Frank Cottrell-Boyce, maybe, but here he is in 2011 on a tour round that heart-warming 70s family drama The Waltons (above). He sets out to understand why he is so fond of the Depressionera dungaree-wearing family of seven siblings – and it's not just because of his own seven children. The Waltons were a Democrat family, he surmises, even though they were meant to appeal to the Bible Belt. It's a pity that Will Geer, the gay communist actor who played Grandpa Walton, was no longer around to share his thoughts but Cottrell-Boyce does get to chat to Earl Hamner, who wrote the books about his own life on which the series was based, and John Boy actor Richard Thomas, who indulges us all with a "Goodnight, Frank". Dame Kiri Te Kanawa at 80: a Classic FM Exclusive

9.00pm Classic FM

A bit of a coup for Classic FM, securing one of the world's most popular living classical singers for a celebration of her 80th birthday over two nights. Tonight she talks to Aled Jones about the excitement of coming to London in the Swinging 60s, what it was like to sing at the King's wedding to Diana Spencer in 1981 - an event seen by 600 million people worldwide - and how she found it challenging having to deal with Leonard Bernstein's smoking. Aled Jones also plays some of Dame Kiri's most famous recordings, including one from the role that catapulted her to stardom when she performed it at the Royal Opera House in 1971, Countess Almaviva in The Marriage of Figaro. Shape Australia's Immigration Policy? When a 1960s pop star decided to write a musical based on the life of Leonardo da Vinci, it's unlikely he thought it would impact immigration policy on the other side of the world. The tiny Pacific island nation of Nauru used to be one of the world's richest countries due to its natural resources, but blew its cash in a series of disastrous investments, including funding a production of the musical in London's West End. With few other options to prop up its economy, it became an off-shore processing centre for Australia's asylum seekers. (R)

Face behind the voice Ryan Tubridy Virgin Radio

Age 50 Current job Presenter of weekday morning show (10am-1pm) since the start of Evans. The show is a real broad mix Beautiful South or Crowded House song slips through."

he attended Blackrock College (former pupils include Bob Geldof, Ardal O'Hanlon and rugby star Brian O'Driscoll). At the age of 12 he wrote to The Irish Times pointing out the lack of movies for children at his local cinema. The story was picked up by RTE television and he found himself appearing on the Saturday children's show talking about movies.

Greek and Roman at University College Dublin, he started a proper job at RTE, working his way up from being coffee boy for radio legend Gerry Ryan. By his late 20s he had his own radio show, before entering the RTE TV stratosphere presenting its iconic The Late Late Show, made famous by Gay Byrne, from 2009 until last year. He had sat in on Radio 2 for Terry Wogan and Chris Evans, which led to getting the show at Virgin.

Worst moment "I had a freak-out Bercow, sitting in reception at RTE. I said to the team, 'Hang on, he's not on until tomorrow.' But I was wrong. Within five minutes he was sitting

Off air "I live in north-west London and I still have a place in Dublin. I'm new to London but feel very at home and welcome. I'm a real bookworm – big into history and politics - I've had a great time discovering London bookshops."

First radio memory "We had a radio in every room when I was growing up. What stays in the memory is the theme tune to the Gay Byrne show. I can still sing it the soundtrack to a generation." Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans has a relentlessly positive style - important in a world gone mad. Terry Wogan – just a gentle Irish presence, a remarkable person who was very kind to me. Kirsty Young - when she did Desert Island Discs there was always something mischievous in her voice."

Ambition/Dream job "In many ways I've fulfilled my ambitions but I'd still love to do something on TV involving travel and books."

Secret skills "I do make a great Eve's pudding. I'd call it a spiritual song slips through."

he attended Blackrock College (former pupils include Bob Geldof, Ardal O'Hanlon and rugby star Brian O'Driscoll). At the age of 12 he wrote to The Irish Times pointing out the lack of movies for children at his local cinema. The story was picked up by RTE television and he found himself appearing on the Saturday children's show talking about movies.

Greek and Roman at University College Dublin, he started a proper job at RTE, working his way up from being coffee boy for radio legend Gerry Ryan. By his late 20s he had his own radio show, before entering the RTE TV stratosphere presenting its iconic The Late Late Show. made famous by Gay Byrne, from 2009 until last year. He had sat in on Radio 2 for Terry Wogan and Chris Evans, which led to getting the show at Virgin.

Social media - yes or no? "I don't like X/Twitter - it's the town stocks masquerading as the town hall.

Bercow, sitting in reception at RTE. Within five minutes he was sitting no prep, but he was a great talker."

Off air "I live in north-west London and I still have a place in Dublin. I'm new to London but feel very at home and welcome. I'm a real bookworm – big into history and politics - I've had a great time discovering London bookshops."

First radio memory "We had a radio in every room when I was growing up. What stays in the memory is the theme tune to the Gay Byrne show. I can still sing it the soundtrack to a generation."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans has a relentlessly positive style - important in a world gone mad. Terry Wogan – just a gentle Irish presence, a remarkable person who was very kind to me. Kirsty Young - when she did Desert Island Discs there was always something mischievous in her voice."

Ambition/Dream job "In many ways I've fulfilled my ambitions but I'd still love to do something on TV involving travel and books."

Secret skills "I do make a great Eve's pudding. I'd call it a spiritual event." SIMON O'HAGAN

Face behind the voice Ryan Tubridy Virgin Radio

Age 50 Current job Presenter of Virgin Radio's weekday morning show (10am-1pm) since the start of this year. "It's a dream to come on air straight after my friend Chris Evans. The show is a real broad mix that takes in things I love. There's chit-chat about books and places to visit, and because I'm new to the UK, I feel I have the eyes and ears of a stranger." The music is formatted but "I like what I play, especially if something by the Beautiful South or Crowded House comes on. The occasional Beatles song slips through."

CV Born and brought up in Dublin, he attended Blackrock College (former pupils include Bob Geldof, Ardal O'Hanlon and rugby star Brian O'Driscoll). At the age of 12 he wrote to The Irish Times pointing out the lack of movies for children at his local cinema. The story was picked up by RTE television and he found himself appearing on the Saturday children's show talking about movies. After studying history, politics,

By his late 20s he had his own radio show, before entering the RTE TV stratosphere presenting its iconic The Late Late Show. made famous by Gay Byrne, from 2009 until last year. He had sat in on Radio 2 for Terry Wogan and Chris Evans, which led to getting the show at Virgin.

interview I did with the former Beirut hostage Brian Keenan. It was 40 minutes, face to face, unforgettable. He brought us to where your heart is - so vivid."

Worst moment "I had a freak-out Bercow, sitting in reception at RTE. I said to the team, 'Hang on, he's not on until tomorrow.' But I was wrong. Within five minutes he was sitting no prep, but he was a great talker."

Off air "I live in north-west London and I still have a place in Dublin. I'm new to London but feel very at home and welcome. I'm a real bookworm – big into history and politics - I've had a great time discovering London bookshops."

First radio memory "We had a radio in every room when I was growing up. What stays in the memory is the theme tune to the Gay Byrne show. I can still sing it the soundtrack to a generation."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans has a relentlessly positive style - important in a world gone mad. Terry Wogan – just a gentle Irish presence, a remarkable person who was very kind to me. Kirsty Young - when she did Desert Island Discs there was always something mischievous in her voice."

Ambition/Dream job "In many ways I've fulfilled my ambitions but I'd still love to do something on TV involving travel and books."

Secret skills "I do make a great Eve's pudding. I'd call it a spiritual event." SIMON O'HAGAN

Face behind the voice Ryan Tubridy Virgin Radio

Age 50 Current job Presenter of Virgin Radio's weekday morning show (10am-1pm) since the start of this year. "It's a dream to come on air straight after my friend Chris Evans. The show is a real broad mix that takes in things I love. There's chit-chat about books and places to visit, and because I'm new to the UK, I feel I have the eyes and ears of a stranger." The music is formatted but "I like what I play, especially if something by the Beautiful South or Crowded House comes on. The occasional Beatles song slips through."

CV Born and brought up in Dublin, he attended Blackrock College (former pupils include Bob Geldof, Ardal O'Hanlon and rugby star Brian O'Driscoll). At the age of 12 he wrote to The Irish Times pointing out the lack of movies for children at his local cinema. The story was picked up by RTE television and he found himself appearing on the Saturday children's show talking about movies. After studying history, politics,

Greek and Roman at University College Dublin, he started a proper job at RTE, working his way up from being coffee boy for radio legend Gerry Ryan. By his late 20s he had his own radio show, before entering the RTE TV stratosphere presenting its iconic The Late Late Show, made famous by Gay Byrne, from 2009 until last year. He had sat in on Radio 2 for Terry Wogan and Chris Evans, which led to getting the show at Virgin.

Social media - yes or no? "I don't like X/Twitter - it's the town stocks masquerading as the town hall. But I love Instagram."

Best moment "Probably an RTE interview I did with the former Beirut hostage Brian Keenan. It was 40 minutes, face to face, unforgettable. He brought us to where your heart is - so vivid."

Worst moment "I had a freak-out moment when I saw the Speaker of the House of Commons, John Bercow, sitting in reception at RTE. I said to the team, 'Hang on, he's not on until tomorrow.' But I was wrong. Within five minutes he was sitting in front of me. live on air. I'd done no prep, but he was a great talker."

Off air "I live in north-west London and I still have a place in Dublin. I'm new to London but feel very at home and welcome. I'm a real bookworm – big into history and politics - I've had a great time discovering London bookshops."

First radio memory "We had a radio in every room when I was growing up. What stays in the memory is the theme tune to the Gay Byrne show. I can still sing it the soundtrack to a generation."

Favourite broadcasters "Chris Evans has a relentlessly positive style - important in a world gone mad. Terry Wogan – just a gentle Irish presence, a remarkable person who was very kind to me. Kirsty Young - when she did Desert Island Discs there was always something mischievous in her voice."

Ambition/Dream job "In many ways I've fulfilled my ambitions but I'd still love to do something on TV involving travel and books."

Secret skills "I do make a great Eve's pudding. I'd call it a spiritual event." SIMON O'HAGAN

Books

T's HARD TO know what to call Alice Roberts. She's an academic, author, archaeologist, palaeontologist, presenter of everything from BBC2's Digging for Britain to Sky's Royal Autopsy. And when I ask how she describes herself, it doesn't get a great deal simpler: "I'm a biological anthropologist, a clinical anatomist and my background is in medicine." "Can I just call you 'the cave woman'?" I ask. "I hate the term caveman!" she says. "Our prehistoric ancestors mostly lived in tents and other shelters."

"Basically, I'm interested in bones," she says, throwing me one at last. That certainly explains her latest book, Crypt (subtitled Life, death and disease in the Middle Ages and Beyond), but does dramatically undersell the full breadth of her CV, which encompasses her current official title of Professor of Public Engagement in Science at Birmingham University, and her very unofficial one of "archbishop of atheism".

"I was president of Humanists UK for four years," she says. "They do brilliant work – around assisted dying, for example, and lobbying for evolution to be in the primary school curriculum. It's strange: I was brought up in quite a religious household, then left that behind when

'A lot of people are humanists without using that label'

I was studying sciences – but it wasn't till I met [physicist and presenter of Radio 4's The Life Scientific] Jim Al-Khalili, at a science conference, that he taught me what I am. A lot of people have a humanist outlook without necessarily using that label: it's just a natural philosophy, using rational enquiry to understand the world, and combining that approach with empathy as a base for living your life."

That may not sound too controversial a credo, but Roberts "met with an absolute definite no" when she asked if she could present R4's religious Thought for the Day slot as a humanist, during her presidency of the society. She's still indignant: "Excluding non-religious voices sends out a message that they don't have an ethical perspective that's worth listening to, and that's quite damaging." She believes the BBC should reflect the fact that today "less than half the population is religious".

As an advocate for the scientific method, she certainly makes it sound sexier than when most of us encountered it at school. Her discoveries documented in Crypt take place both in hi-tech labs with advanced techniques for DNA capture from crumbling bones, and in what fingernails" digs in the Plague cemeteries of underground England.

There's nothing dry or dusty about the science, either. Roberts coaxes incredible stories from the skeletons of the Mary Rose, sunk in 1545; from the remains of a noblewoman willingly walled up for life in a stone cell in York in 1448; and from a handful of bones in Hampshire "that suggest the Plague may be much more ancient than the Black Death".

ESPITE THE EXTREME age of some of the subjects, contemporary parallels are never far below the surface in Crypt. There are pandemics from China, battles between Church and State - and the St Brice's Day Massacre. "That's a horrendous episode," explains Roberts, for the benefit of those unfamiliar with 11th-century history. "King Ethelred the Unready unleashed this tide of ethnic violence against the Danes who had settled in communities in England, and it shows the terrible power of words to incite violence."

Before we finish, there's another matter she wishes to discuss. "I'm still cross with Radio Times," she says. "I won a Blue Peter competition when I was 14, to design a cover for the magazine, and it didn't end up being the actual cover. Instead they photographed me with the presenters, which was really the worst thing you could do to the gawky, self-conscious 14-year-old I was at the time. I had a lovely day watching the RTcover with my photo on rolling off the presses with the presenters. But still..."

The way of the samurai

Rediscover James Clavell's famous 70s novel

SHOGUN JAMES CLAVELL

Shogun Tuesday Disney+ Filled with historical detail and with a gripping plot, James Clavell's bestselling novel

Shogun (Hodder, £12.99) springs to life in a lavish new adaptation on Disney+. The first in a series of six novels, Shogun follows navigator John Blackthorne as he endures the difficulties of being a foreigner in Japan c1600, working his way from mistrusted outsider to confidant, adviser, and even samurai. Clavell meticulously brings feudal Japan to life through the eyes of a stranger. Explore Japan: see page 142

DIMITRIS XYGALATAS

Book of the Week Monday-Friday 9.45am, 12.30am Radio 4 Since prehistoric times humans have developed rituals in thousands of ways, ranging from the innocuous (knocking on wood, or blowing on dice) to the extreme (exhuming the dead for parades and celebrations). In Ritual (Profile Books, £10.99), anthropologist Dimitris Xygalatas examines the hows and whys of the actions that pervade every society, using new technology to mix science with cultural research in an attempt to shed some light on the often obscure reasons behind our behaviour. Radio: see page 118 your shelves for Antonia Scott. A savant who's solved dozens of crimes despite no police affiliation, she finds herself drawn back into a programme designed to make use of the cleverest people in Europe - but to what end? With a new partner, a gory murder, and a kidnapping to investigate, this translation of Juan Gómez-Jurado's Red Queen (Pan, £9.99) keeps all the pace and momentum of the original Spanish.

RHIANNON THOMAS

roaring battle scenes; inspiring landscapes and forbidden love; unlikely alliances and murderous betrayal – Shogun has everything you want in a historical epic. And nearly 50 years after James Clavell wrote his 1975 bestselling novel (see p141), Disney's lavish adaptation takes to screens in a ten-part series, starring Hiroyuki Sanada (of Sunshine and John Wick: Chapter 4) and Anna Sawai (Monarch: Legacy of Monsters).

The fictional narrative of a shipwrecked English sailor who becomes embroiled with Japanese warlords – right on the eve of the nation's pivotal civil war – has its roots in real-life events, of course. Discover the true story, and the natural beauty of Japan, on your own tour of the country's 17th-century wonders.

Spies, mercenaries, arsonists, occasional assassins – ninjas are the ultimate symbol of feudal Japan. These covert agents, hired to do the bidding of warring daimyo lords, largely hailed from Iga city in the coastal Mie prefecture, near historic Kyoto. Explore the ninjutsu myth – and reality – at the Ninja Museum of Igaryu (iganinja.jp), where you can see a ninja home littered with hidden traps and escape routes; learn about their secret codes; and catch a weaponry demonstration. Ninety minutes' drive away, Ninja Kingdom Ise (ise-jokamachi.jp) provides more theme-park-style fun – you can shoot bows and arrows or dress up for an immersive role-playing game – or for a change of pace, carry on to grand Ise Jingu instead. One of the most sacred shrines in Japan, this 125-building complex dates back some 2,000 years.

2,000 years.

MEDIEVAL CASTLES

Think of feudal Japan and you probably think of castles. Japan still has about 100 but, thanks to centuries of wars, fires and earthquakes, most are now reconstructions. Not Himeji, though (himejicastle.jp): this stone and wood castle set on a hilltop between Kyoto and Hiroshima dates from the 14th century, and impressive looks and scale earned it Unesco World Heritage status. Like a multi-tiered wedding cake, the white-washed central keep rises six floors, accessed only via steep wooden staircases, while an endless series of outbuildings, walkways and moat are coddled in over a thousand spring-blossoming cherry trees.

SAMURAI BATTLEGROUND

Set in 1600, Shogun provides a fictionalised lead-up to the pivotal Battle of Sekigahara – a clash between rival warlord factions that would determine Japan's new ruler (the shogun). In real life, warrior Tokugawa Ieyasu (the basis for the series' Yoshi Toranaga) met the army of his opponent Ishida Mitsunari on the Sekigahara plain in Gifu on 21 October 1600. Today military enthusiasts can discover what happened between them in a museum on the very site (sekigahara. pref.gifu.lg.jp). Explore the landscapes by foot or hired bike, then extend your exploration trekking a stretch of the Nakasendo Way, the old thoroughfare connecting Tokyo and Kyoto.

ANCIENT GARDENS

While one of Japan's most famed landscape gardens didn't open to the public until 1871, the 25-acre Kenroku-en (www.pref.ishikawa.jp) has its origins in the early 17th century when it was developed by the daimyo lords of the Maeda clan. Set in the shadow of a castle in the 400-year-old town of Kanazawa, it draws visitors for its bridges and teahouse, water features and – from mid-February to mid-March – sublime plum blossoms.

While in Kanazawa, also visit the Ninjadera temple, littered with ancient secret doors and passages; and Nagamachi, one of the best-preserved samurai districts in the country, now home to great restaurants and craft shops.

TIMELESS SHRINE

Tokugawa Ieyasu – the warlord on whom Shogun's Yoshi Toranaga is based – has his final resting place in one of the most spectacular mausoleums in Japan: Toshogu shrine. Squirrelled away in the pretty mountain town of Nikko, north of Tokyo, the Unesco World Heritage site contains 55 buildings dripping in elaborate wood carvings and paintwork, and cloaked in mature forest. Tour the grounds – keeping eyes peeled for the famed Three Wise Monkeys (who see, speak and hear no evil) – and pass by the holy central shrine, home to Ieyasu's spirit. Afterwards, visit the 100m-high Kegon waterfall or unwind in one of Nikko's many onsen (hot springs) resorts.

UNTOUCHED LANDSCAPES

In Shogun, English navigator John Blackthorne is shipwrecked off the Izu Peninsula near Tokyo. In reality, Blackthorne's model – William Adams – and his crew were wrecked off Kyushu in April 1600. Today Kyushu, Japan's southerly main island, fascinates not only for its history of samurai battles (around Kumamoto Castle) or cultural melting-pot capital, Nagasaki (once the hub for international trade relations). It's worth a visit for its remarkable land-scapes that feel like they have been lifted from a bygone era. Don't miss Mount Aso, Japan's largest active volcano, or the tropical forests of Kagoshima.

STATE PENSION: WHAT YOU GET

Pensioners over 80 receive an extra 25p a week! But some will get more, says Paul Lewis

ADIO TIMES READER Delia emailed me in order to get something off her chest: "I turned 80 at the end of September last year and received an age-related rise to my pension of 25p per week. This is an insult. I'm writing to you to let off steam."

Everyone on the state pension receives this "birthday present" of an extra 25p a week when they reach 80 - but it's now worth so little you'd need to save it up for three weeks to buy a second-class stamp! (In 1971, when the addition was introduced, the state pension was only £6 a week. So 25p, while not generous, was the equivalent today of £6.50 on top of the current basic pension of £156.20 a week.)

Delia thinks it would be better to scrap what she calls "this paltry sum". But it costs around £47 million a year to give it to the 3.6 million state pensioners over 80, and I can see the headlines now if the Government tried to take it away! However, I don't imagine they'll be raising it to £6.50 either (at a cost of over £1 billion a year). Not least because it's a problem that will eventually go away: the 25p addition will not be paid with the new state pension when the first people who get that reach 80.

Meanwhile, there's a much bigger bonus for some people aged 80 or more. If they don't get a state pension, or they get one which is currently below £93.60 a week, they can get their pension boosted to that amount. Everyone aged 80 or more is entitled to this pension - called Category D - regardless of how many National Insurance Contributions they have paid or their other income.

It is given solely because of their age and a basic residence test. Around 84,500 people get one,

'Claim if you're 80 and you get under £93.60 - or nothing' but the Department for Work and Pensions has admitted it has failed in the past to give this top-up automatically to people on low or no pension when they reach 80.

So it's well worth claiming if you're aged 80 or more and your basic state pension is less than £93.60 a week or you get no state pension at all.

Call 0800 731 7898 to request a claim form, or search gov.uk for "over 80 pension".

DICTIONARY CORNER Susie Dent

Word of the week Paragon

The Ancient Greeks were no strangers to battle. Many expressions in English derive from their wars, such as Pyrrhic victory, which takes its name from a Greek king who defeated the Romans in 279 BC but incurred heavy losses. The phrase "a paragon of virtue" is also connected to ancient conflicts. When preparing for war, Greek soldiers would hone their spears, swords and axes. The Greek for sharpen was akonan, which was combined with the prefix para to mean "sharpen against". Centuries later, the Italians adopted the word in the form of paragone, to mean a touchstone, used for testing the purity of gold. It's from here that English took the idea of a model of excellence, in particular someone against whose morals the rest of us should be judged.

THAT'S GOT TO HURT

I really feel for Lana Washington (Vicky McClure) in Trigger Point (Sunday ITV1). If she'd really been blown up as often, and at such close proximity, as she has been in this series, her insides would be jelly, her brain would be mush and she'd be permanently deaf.

WE'LL MISS STEVE

I was shocked to hear of the sudden death of Radio 2 presenter Steve Wright. For me and many others of a certain age, his broadcasts were the backdrop of our formative years and had a huge influence on us.

Steve was uniquely creative, a trailblazer in a golden age of radio broadcasting during the 1980s, 90s and beyond. His musical knowledge and tastes spanned a wide field.

A consummate professional, he also proved himself to be a highly skilled interviewer on his weekday shows. He questioned his guests with insight but always treated them with charm and respect. His sense of humour was infectious and he had the ability to make you feel as if he was chatting to you personally, as a friend.

Steve Wright's death marks the end of an era but his enormous legacy will live on.

Failing to read the room

It was nice to hear debut novelist and Strictly star Jay McGuiness being taken seriously on Breakfast (14 February BBC1) as he spoke in praise of libraries and the inspiration he gets for his writing there. This was in contrast with the comment made by Ranvir Singh - sitting in as host of Lorraine (13 February ITV1) - when she responded mockingly, I felt, with "Oh, you're such an old-school soul, aren't you - who goes to the library any more!" A very thoughtless response when many communities are working hard to keep their libraries open in the face of spending cuts. Libraries provide many events for children, and I think you'll find most authors are supporters. And, ves, many of us do still use libraries, regularly.

I was so happy 5 Sports Extra carried the Australia versus West Indies cricket over the past few weeks - but this was tempered on 9 February when an arbitrary finish time was set for 11.30am. BLOWING THE WHISTLE

I increasingly find that broadcasters put up team sheets on screen and then remove them too quickly for me to read. This spans different sports: for example, the team sheets for the Women's FA Cup match between Arsenal and Manchester City (11 February BBC2) contained the names of 11 starting players and eight substitutes, but it was almost impossible to read them in the brief time allowed.

The worst example is the list of substitutes in rugby union: a sport in which use of the bench is of great importance.

HIT THE ROADSHOW

Get your tickets for a great free day out!

It's that time of year again when Antiques Roadshow announces the dates and venues for the filming of a new series — so make a note of where and when series 47 will be recorded (below right) and be sure to book your tickets soon. It's first come, first served!

The Roadshow has just celebrated its 45th birthday, having launched at Newbury, in Berkshire, on 18 February 1979. The presenters back then were Bruce Parker and the much-loved antiques expert Arthur Negus. Over the years the faces may have changed, but at the heart of the show are still the wonder and surprise when something bought for next to nothing at a fête or a car boot sale turns out to be rare and valuable.

Notable finds include: a Victoria Cross medal brought to Pollok Park, Glasgow, last year. It had been awarded to a Sikh corporal, Gian Singh, in 1945 for his bravery fighting with the Allies in the Far East. Militaria specialist Mark Smith valued it at £250,000 and it's now on display at the Kelvingrove Museum and Art Gallery in Glasgow.

A guitar once owned by George Harrison – and which research revealed had also been played by John Lennon – turned up at Battle

Abbey in Sussex in 2019. It was sold the next year for £190,000.

But there have been two even higher valuations. A "pear blossom" (left) crafted out of gold, jade, diamonds and silver turned out to be by Fabergé, no less, and was valued by expert Geoffrey Munn at a cool £1 million at the Black Country Living Museum in Dudley in 2017. Also hitting a £1 million valuation, at Gateshead in 2008, was the final maquette (below, left) on which the Angel of the North sculpture was based.

...on nudity, running with wolves and his Line of Duty friends keeping him grounded

What's the view from your sofa? Here in Vegas in front of the sofa is my son's table, which is full of toys. When you've got a four-year-old, the house is a riot. We've got a big telly. My wife [American actor and event planner, Tianna Chanel Flynn] has green fingers so there are flowers and plants hanging around. We're very lucky to also have a home in Greenock, in Scotland, where I'm from – the view from the sofa there is overlooking the Clyde and it's beautiful.

What have you enjoyed watching on TV?

I've just started Curb Your Enthusiasm, which is brilliant. I got quite obsessed with The Bear – it was pretty sensational. I couldn't make my son's breakfast without saying, "Yes, Chef!"

Who gets control of the remote? Something tells me it's your son...

Oh, for sure! All we get are Disney films, Minions and Despicable Me. My wife would probably say it's me who controls the remote – although she gets control of most things in the house, to be fair!

When did you realise you wanted to be an actor?

When I was 15, I went on a double date with my mate and we saw My Name Is Joe, a Ken Loach movie. It was the first time I saw people on the big screen who spoke like me. The following year, Ken was casting a movie [Sweet Sixteen] in my town and I went along. I'm very lucky – everything aligned for me in that period. If I hadn't seen that film, I would never have gone to the audition and if Ken wasn't holding auditions in my town, I probably wouldn't be an actor.

You made your name as Line of Duty's Steve Arnott. Did you realise how much that role would change your life?

I probably owe my career to two people

– Ken Loach and Jed Mercurio. I didn't think anybody would ever trust me to be the lead on a BBC network show. None of us had any idea what it would become.

Vicky [McClure] and Aidy [Adrian Dunbar] became my best friends. We speak pretty much daily on WhatsApp.

Would you do another series?

Every year it has got bigger and the numbers on the last series were insane. It was quite overwhelming! I remember going for a walk in Edinburgh when the last episode aired. The streets were empty because everybody was inside watching the finale! It felt like mammoth pressure – and almost became too big and took on a life of its own. We're really lucky that we've got each other to keep ourselves grounded.

You've spoken out about wanting to do less on-screen nudity. Does having an impressive CV make that easier?

Absolutely – I'm lucky I've got myself in a position where I can have those conversations. I also feel I've done my time – I've done full frontal. I've had my arse out loads. I sometimes get sent pictures of it on social media – being a father, you do have to start being more careful, but if it was essential to the story, I'd be up for it.

FOOD AND TELLY

DRINK/SNACK OF CHOICE A glass of malbec and a packet of beef McCoys.

FIRST TV MEMORY

My mum loved
Ballykissangel –
[Comedian] Kevin
Bridges has a joke about it: when you heard that theme, you knew it was school in the morning.

In your latest travelogue you've swapped Scotland for Norway, where you meet a pack of wolves, and one puts its tongue in your mouth!

I've realised I've got a mad sense of security. When the experts said it was OK to meet the wolves, I thought fine. I didn't really have any fears. I think that's why the show works – my travel companion Phil MacHugh likes Scandi pop and fine dining – I like running with wolves and getting ducked underwater! Maybe I'm having a midlife crisis – I've also started taking three-wheel motorbike lessons.

The first series felt like a homage to Scotland – as you've got older do you feel that pull of home more?

One hundred per cent. I'm lucky I have a home there. With age, you do start to appreciate what the country means to you. I do as much as I can to try and promote it. I'm very lucky that I'm getting to be on the other side of the camera, producing. There are a lot of Scottish stories I want to tell. KELLY-ANNE TAYLOR
